HORSE POWER.

The horse has wonderful muscular power, but will suffer a great deal at times with nervous attacks if not properly groomed and stabled. This illustrates that a great deal of neuralgia is caused by imprudence and results from shock from cold to the nervous organism in parts most exposed to the cold. Hence, neuralgia is so often an affliction of the head, face and neck, as they are frequently badly protected against intense cold. The use of warmth as an antidote is apparent, and the warmth to the afflicted part imparted by the use of St. Jacobs Oil, together with the soothing and strengthening influence of the remedy, lull the pain and quickly restore a good healthful condition of the nerves, curing even the worst cases.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

A Second Experience.

There Will Be No Doubt as to What Physicians Will Be Called in Future By Mrs. Hurlbert.

From the Republican, Fresno, Cal.

An interesting case comes from Kingsburg, in Fresno County, California. Mrs. Mattie Hurlbert tells her own story, and as she is a lady who is well and favorably known and well worthy of credence, it wil be found interesting:

"While I was living in Fresno City in 1893," Mrs. Hurlbert said, "shortly after the birth of what was then my youngest child, I began to lose all strength and vitality, and was in a very serious condition. Dr. Hayden of Fresno, had been attending me, but his efforts to help me proved unavailing, and I was gradually growing worse, though I tried all the doctors and remedies within reach. One day I heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and I also read an advertisement about these pills in a newspaper, and made up my mind to give them a trial as a dernier resort. I at once procured a supply, and took them according to rule until I had used four boxes. By that time I was so much improved in every way that I could do my own housework and was in exuberant spirits at my returned health. I felt splendidly until one year and a half ago when another baby was born, and I was taken just as before, and brought very low again. The attending physician feared that my illness this time would result seriously, but he was not able to help me, so I again turned to Dr. Williams' remedy, and after taking two boxes was up and about my work again. I shall always keep Pink Pills in my house from this time on, and shall turn to them alone for medical comfort in the time of illness.

(Signed) "Mattie Hurlbert."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

A Reflection on Her Age.

"That prim Miss Passay is mad enough to bite me."

"What's the matter?"

"Why, she has just joined the new society that believes that human impressions are mainly derived through the sense of smell."

"Well?"

"Well, I suggested that she was a scentenarian."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Canary islands have a peculiar plant known as the fountain tree, which contains receptacles for the collection of rain. Several gallons of water are often found in one of these natural pitchers.

The mosquitoes found in swamps and damp woods are generally more brilliantly colored than those varieties which frequent human habitations.

The snowball is symbolic of winter, its name and appearance evidently suggesting the idea.

Letters posted in New York will reach the Barbados eight days later.

Limits of the Universe.

Prof. Simon Newcomb, in a recent paper, discussed the question of stellar distances. He said the stars of small magnitude were evidently not as remote from the earth as their faintness would indicate, and this fact seemed to warrant the inference that the visible universe has a definite limit in space.

Animals Imitating Plants.

Not long ago Prof. Verrill exhibited to the members of the National Academy of Sciences in New York some beautiful examples of mollusks, dwelling in the Sargasso Sea, that imitate not only the seaweed among which they live, but even the parasitic growths found upon the weeds.

Music for the Deaf.

At a meeting of the Royal Society in December Prof. McKendrick described a method by which it was possible to stimulate electrically the sensory nerves of the skin "so that some of the elements of music rhythm and intensity—might be perceived and even enjoyed by those who had become deaf."

A Gigantic Pear-Tree.

A famous pear tree, which had lived nearly six centuries, near Toulon, was destroyed recently by a violent windstorm. The trunk was nearly twelve feet in circumference. Monsieur Chabaud, the proprietor of the ground on which the tree stood, after corresponding with nearly all the botanical societies in Europe, could learn of no pear tree equal in size and age to this one.

How Fast Can Ducks Fly?

While measuring the height and velocity of clouds recently, Messrs. Clayton and Fergusson, of the Blue Hill Observatory, observed a flight of ducks passing across their base-line in the Neponset River valley. With their theodolites they succeeded in measuring the height of the ducks above ground, 958 feet, and subsequent observations enabled them to calculate the velocity of flight of the birds, which was about 47.8 miles per hour.

Transmission of Electric Power.

The world-wide renown of Niagara Falls has lent peculiar distinction to the great electric power plant recently installed there, but the American Machinist says that "in so far as the Niagara plant is a long-distance one the work done up to date has been surpassed in several instances, both in the distance covered and the amount of power transmitted." Many of the greatest electric power plants are among the Rocky Mountains and on the Pacific coast. At Fresno, Cal., a reservoir on the brow of a near-by mountain supplies the heaviest head of water yet used for such a purpose, 1,400 feet, and the power is distributed over a distance of thirty-five miles. In some of the Western installations the water, after serving its purpose in generating electric power, is utilized for irrigating land.

Seeing Right-Side Up.

The lenses of the eye produce on the retina an inverted image of objects looked at, and the question is often asked, "Why do things appear right-side up when their images are wrong-side up?" It occurred to Mr. Stratton, of the University of California, to try the effect of preventing the inversion of images on the retina. This was accomplished by means of an optical instrument which excluded from the eyes all light except that which passed through the instrument itself. The instrument was adjusted to the eyes at 3 o'clock one afternoon, and was not removed (except at night, when the eyes were bandaged) until noon the next day. At first, to the person whose eyes were thus treated, everything seemed topsyturvy and illusory, and the mind instinctively tried to imagine objects to be in the position in which they ordinarily appear. After a time, however, the feeling of the unreality of what was seen passed away, and the person experimented even began to imagine everything that lay outside his field of vision to be arranged in the same way as what he saw. This goes to show that habit and experience counteract the effect of the inversion of images in the eyes.

Animal Wars.

Twenty-five years ago the mongoose, the great enemy of snakes in India, was imported into Jamaica to destroy the rats which were devastating the sugar-cane and other crops of the island. Having exterminated the rats the mongoos next attacked poultry and all kinds of game, as well as snakes, lizards and turtles, and finally even began to feed upon sugar-cane, bananas, pineapples, etc. But at length, according to the account recently published by Prof. Duerden, of Jamaica, the tables were turned against the invader. What its larger foes could not accomplish seems to have been done by ticks and other small insects. The natural enemies of these pests having been driven off by the mongoos the ticks multiplied enormously, until even human beings suffered from their attacks. The little pests then fastened upon the mongoos, which within the past few years has notably diminished in numbers. And now, as the mongoos gradually disappears, the snakes, birds and lizards are beginning to return.

Baboon Soldiers.

Man is not the only animal who carries on his warfare by means of organized bands, and calls in the forces of nature to assist him. The German naturalist and traveler, Brehm, witnessed in Central Africa fights that were conducted in as orderly a manner as if the warriors had been really men, instead of only somewhat like them in form.

The actors in the play were baboons, and their enemies were in one case the traveler's dogs, though the baboons were ready to fight with any creature that attacked them, man only excepted; and he owed his exemption solely to the fact that the baboons could not often gain a point of vantage.

The naturalist himself was once stoned out of a pass in a very few minutes by these creatures, who sprang upon ledges and stones, looked down for a few seconds on the valley, growling, snarling and screaming, and then began to roll down stones with so much vigor and adroitness that the intruders took to flight. The baboons evidently knew the value of co-operation, for the naturalist saw two of them combine their efforts in order to set a particularly heavy stone rolling. One monkey, bent on making the most of his missile, was seen to carry a stone up a tree, that he might hurl it with greater effect.

On the occasion when the dogs attacked the baboons, the baboons were crossing a valley, and as usual during a march, the females and young were in the center, the males heading the column and bringing up the rear. As the dogs rushed upon them, only the females took to flight.

The males turned and faced the enemy, growling, beating the ground with their hands, and opening their mouths, so as to show their glittering teeth. They looked so fierce and malicious that the dogs—Arab greyhounds, accustomed to fight successfully with hyenas and other beasts of prey—shrank back. By the time they were encouraged to renew the attack, the whole herd had made their way, covered by the rear guard, to the rocks, one six months' old monkey alone excepted.

This little monkey sat on a rock, surrounded by the dogs, but he was not long left in his perilous position. An old baboon stepped from a cliff near by, advanced toward the dogs, keeping them in check by threatening gestures and sounds, picked up the baby monkey and carried it to a place of safety on the cliff, while the whole crowd of baboons watched the act of heroism and shouted their battle-cry.—Youth's Companion.

OLD PRACTICAL JOKES.

Scene of Confusion in King George's Court.

A practical joke may be defined as one in which merriment is produced or sought not by words but by action, practiced upon a fellow-creature—commonly an offensive or annoying action. Even if harmless, it holds up the sufferer to ridicule, and intelligent human beings do not need to be told that such conduct is reprehensible.

But if the joke be well contrived, sufficiently humorous in idea and neatly executed, we do not care so much as we should if it fell under the "practical" class. Who would not have liked to be present at the royal masquerade when Heidegger, master of the revels to George II., was confronted by his double?

The Duke of Montagu had obtained a cast of the great man's face. From this he caused a wax mask to be fashioned and colored. Heidegger's tailor supplied a fac simile of the new and gorgeous dress he was to wear, and the duke engaged an actor to play the part. He told the band, at the last moment, to strike up "Charley Over the Water" at His Majesty's appearance instead of "God Save the King."

They hesitated. But it was indubitably Heidegger—features, voice, clothes, and also imprecations when the conductor demurred. So the king heard that treasonable air, perhaps for the first time, on entering. We can faintly imagine the tumult. Heidegger rushed to the band, struck the conductor, set him playing "God Save the King," and rushed back to apologize. Next moment he returned to the orchestra, equally furious—that is, his double returned—ordering the band to resume "Charley Over the Water," and the bewildered musicians obeyed. There was never such a scene in the presence of royalty.

The officers of the guard in attendance made a dash at the band with swords, but those in the secret blocked the way. Heidegger, dancing round the king, made inarticulate protestations and excuses, whilst His Majesty stormed and threatened, making for the door. The situation became perilous. So the counterfeit stepped forward crying, with passionate indignation, "Sire, the devil has taken my likeness to undo me! Look at him!"

Heidegger saw his double, gasped, gibbered and fell senseless. One may think that longer and more complicated "business" might have developed from such an ingenious hoax, but for a dramatic situation of its class this could not be beaten.

In some parts of South America good folk store all the glass and crockery broken in the twelvemonth, and at carnival time put it into a sack attached to the lofty balcony by a stout cord, not quite long enough to reach the ground. When a desirable victim passes beneath, the sack is quietly let go—to be stayed, with a hideous crash, upon his very heels. It is credibly reported that foreigners unprepared for this jest have tumbled headlong at the shock and others have taken to their beds with an attack of fever. These are rare triumphs.

The "Soo Canal."

The "Soo Canal," a familiar colloquial designation for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, connecting the waters of Lakes Superior and Huron, is famous in the history of canals and canal building. Begun in 1855, by the State of Michigan, it was subsequently transferred to the United States Government, since which time very great improvements have been made. One lock, said to be the largest in the world, is over 500 feet long and 80 feet wide, with a lift of 20 feet. A much larger lock was projected and is now nearing completion on the site of one made in 1855, the later structure being 1,000 feet long, 100 feet wide and 21 feet deep. The importance of this canal to lake navigation may be judged from the fact that it transports every year a larger tonnage than the Suez Canal between the Mediterranean and Red Seas. In the census year it bore 25,000,000 bushels of wheat, 2,500,000 tons of iron ore, 165,000,000 feet of lumber and great quantities of coal.

THE HARBOR LIGHTS OF HOME.

I set my shallop on youth's shining sea
That smiled up at the sun.
"Hurrah!" I cried. "From home a rover free, I'll breast life's waves alone."
And storm and night seemed faint and far away
And old wives' hints of wreck,
Like fairy tales, the while the sunshine lay
Like gold upon the deck.

But when upon the canvas of the cloud,
Ink black in onward rush
And hoarsely mouthing of the thunder loud,
The jagged lightning's brush
Limned me my folly with each vivid stroke,
Then, in the driving foam
And stinging spindrift as the tempest broke,
"Home! Home!" I cried. "My home!"

And through the inky curtain of the gale
There comes a thread of light,
And o'er the slitting of the useless sail
Home voices cheer the night.
For, see! Across the outer bar that lies
Smothered in creamy foam
There shines the welcome of a woman's eyes,
The harbor lights of home!

A CRITIC CORRECTED.

He Was on the Right Track, but Did Not Go Far Enough.

It had been a very bad attempt at authorship, and the actor who had made the venture into literature was sensible enough not to quarrel with the unfavorable verdict of the audience. It was hard to admit that his genius was at fault, but he did so with a good grace and without reservation.

"I—er—I suppose you saw that comedy of mine?" he was saying to a friend.

"Yes, I saw it."

"In looking over the house I was forced to the conclusion that a great many people were missing it, and I was afraid you might be one of them."

"No. I staid till the very end."

"It wasn't a very hilarious occasion, was it?"

"Not very, I must admit. It may be that I didn't catch the spirit of the thing. I hear so much about the density of audiences that I suspect it was due to my own lack of appreciation that I couldn't get entusiastic. But some of it was undoubtedly your fault. You misled me."

"How?"

"You told me it was going to be a funny play."

"That's what I get for trying to be a prophet. I was sure it had all the symptoms when I started in with it. I regarded it as a masterpiece of effervescent hilarity."

"You were wrong. That was the great difficulty with the piece—it was too somber. You must pardon my frankness, but that performance was positively gloomy."

"My boy, you don't speak advisedly. Your comment may be justified by your point of view, but it doesn't cover the ground."

"I had one of the best seats in the house."

"But you should have been with me, up on the stage, where you could watch the audience. Then you would realize that 'gloomy' isn't the word. It was sepulchral."—Exchange.

Suffering Women.

Alas! women do suffer. Why, we often cannot tell, but we know there is one great cause, and that is weakness. The headaches, the depressed feelings, the pains, the discouragements, indeed, almost all the misery has a common cause—weakness. At such times a woman always needs a friend that can be relied upon, and such a friend, for more than twenty years, has been that greatest of all remedies,

ITS MARVELOUS POWER.

Paine's Celery Compound Better Than Years of Doctoring.

There was never a remedy so eminently successful, so far above and beyond all competition, as Paine's celery compound.

Paine's celery compound effects marvelous cures.

Where other remedies miserably fail, and where doctors do not succeed, there Paine's celery compound is found curing disease, making people well and happy.

Here is the case of Mrs. Haff, who lives at 140 Summer Ave., Newark, N. J., and whose portrait is printed here.

"My doctor," she says, "called my disease liver complaint, stomach trouble, nervous dyspepsia, and almost every other name you could think of. When I was in Portland, Ore., I had enlargement of the liver, and the doctor thought all the troubles came from that severe spell of illness. That was 12 years ago, and I have done nothing but doctor ever since. I have had the best physicians examine me, and see if they could do anything for me. For months at a time my stomach and liver have been so sore that I could lie in bed only in misery, and with such severe pain in my back, and so weak that I could hardly talk.

"After I had a bad night I would send for the doctor, and he would leave me a small box of powders and one or two other medicines, and it would cost me $4 every time I had one of these spells. I believe I have taken more medicine than any other living woman.

"Last March I had a call from a lady friend of mine, who asked me, 'What is the matter with you?' I replied by saying, 'How well you look!' 'Yes,' she said. 'I never felt so well in my life.' She is a woman of 45. 'And now', she said, 'I want to give you a little advice. I have been almost at death's door with liver trouble. After the doctor had done all that he could for me I told him not to come again. I showed him a bottle of Paine's celery compound and told him I was going to give that a fair trial. As a result I am strong and well.'

"I sent right over to the drug store and got a bottle of Paine's celery compound, and when I had taken two bottles the soreness had left my stomach and my side felt much better. After I had taken four bottles my side was much stronger, and I was in better spirits and felt as though I might live and not be in such misery. Working people nowadays work the vitality all out every week, and all I ask is to be able to earn the money I have to every week.

"Paine's celery compound has enabled me to do this, and has done me more good than all the doctors put together.

"Why, my nervous system is so entirely strengthened that I feel like a new being, and what is more, I look the good the medicine has done me, right in my face and eyes. Just tell all poor women for me that for a medicine to build one up, give Paine's celery compound a fair trial, and if it does not do it, then they might as well die. I have recommended it to several and it has helped in every case. I have a great deal to worry me, and a dose of the compound gives me quiet sleep and then I can work. If any one wishes to write me they can do so."

Why should a sick person do anything else but try a bottle of Paine's celery compound.

REASONS FOR USING

Walter Baker & Co.'s Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

COUNTING THE APPLE SEEDS.

Made rosy by the great log's light,
Beside the hearth one winter night
That flaming up the chimney dark,
Hit every cranny, every nook,
Upon the rug a little maid
Sat curled, in pose demure and staid.

In pensive mood, with dreamy eyes
She sits, while up the chimney flies
A thought with every fiery spark
Glinting and flashing through the dark.
Till with a sigh profound and deep
She moves, as one moves in her sleep.

A rosy apple in her hand
A weight of thought seems to demand,
She taps it with a finger light,
Then carefully she takes a bite,
Another bite, now one, now two—
The core is thus exposed to view.

Another sigh! what can it be,
My little maid, that aileth thee?
Ah! what is this? Some incantation?
Muttered with such reiteration?
Hark! as each seed her bright eyes see,
These are the words that come to me:

"One I love, two I love,
Three I love, I say!
Four I love with all my heart,
Five I cast away."

Here a tear rolls brightly down.
What the secret she has won,
Who can say? But just behind
Sounds a voice so soft and kind:
"Look again! Thou must indeed Find for me another seed!"

Rosier her bright cheeks glow
In the firelight's ruddy glow.
Sure enough! a culprit seed
Finds she in the core indeed—
"From thy lips I fain would know What the sixth one means, my dear."

"Six he loves," she murmured low,
And the firelight's flickering glow
Two happy faces now disclose
With cheeks aglowing like the rose,
But here we'll let the curtain fall,
For the end is best of all.

DEVAL'S ESCAPE.

It was a red-letter day in my life when I was first put in charge of a "passenger." I'd worked my way up by successive stages from the post of cleaner in the sheds, and, being always a steady-going young fellow, had reached the topmost rung of the ladder sooner than most. There was, perhaps, an extra incentive in my case, as I was courting a little girl who was, she had told me, only waiting till I earned enough to make me the happiest of men.

To be sure, I had a rival, Ernest Deval by name, who was "something in the city" and possessed the showy attractiveness and the art of insidious flattery which sometimes lure fickle-minded women to forsake the true metal for the glittering dross. I must own he occasioned me some slight cause for jealousy, still, secure in the knowledge of our mutual love and knowing Alice to be a sensible little girl, I was on the whole as happy as most chaps who see their sweethearts but once or twice a week.

She had told me on more than one occasion that she wanted nothing to do with him, but in spite of her obvious dislike he persisted in persecuting her with his attentions, and only the day before the incidents happened which I am about to relate I had found it necessary myself to display the finger of Alice to him with my ring upon it, to his ill-concealed chagrin and evident mortification.

On the next night I was, as usual, ordered to take out the sleeping saloon express to the north. My mate had secured the couplings, the old engine was panting and snorting like a thing of life, as if eager for the coming journey, and the bustle on the platform had subsided. The signals were right and I had my hand on the throttle only waiting for the "right away!" when, just as the green light was displayed, a cab rattled into the station, from which an excited man hastily jumped. Flinging some money to the driver, he rushed along the platform and sprang into the first compartment of the train, the next one to the engine, just as I pressed the lever and my fireman had loosened the brake.

We had hardly begun to move when another man, who had been waiting on the station, in the shadow of a pillar, and I knew as Detective Jobson, of Scotland Yard, sprang to the carriage and ejaculating, "Thought I should nab you here, my beauty!" endeavored to enter. I was busy getting under way, but my mate told me that the man in the carriage struck the detective in the face and forced him off the footboard. His hat flew off in the struggle and fell between the platform and the moving train, but the officer, determined not to lose his quarry, was up again in an instant, and though the carriages were flying past him, he sprang upon the footboard of the last coach, heeding not the cries of the excited porters and terrified onlookers; and just as the train cleared the platform he saw the guard lean forward from the open door, and grasping the man by the arms, assist him into the van.

The fugitive in the first coach saw the detective's disappearance also, and his bloodless face blanched a shade paler.

"Great snakes!" exclaimed the fireman, drawing in his breath with a sharp hiss, "that was a narrow shave. Jobson means to have that chap somehow, and have him he will. I wonder what he's wanted for. He'll never reach the landing stage this journey, that's a dead cert!"

"No," said I; "they'll have him at Crewe right enough. Poor beggar! He made a desperate fight for it, anyhow."

The "sleeper," as we called it, was timed straight through to Crewe without a stop, doing the 158 miles in three hours and five minutes. There we left it to another engine which would be in waiting to take it "up" express later in the morning. I knew that as soon as we reached Crewe there would be a crowd of policemen waiting to search the train from end to end. Jobson was up to his work, and the telegraph would be clicking its warning message a moment or two after we had passed through the first station.

It was not the only capture, by any means, I had witnessed this astute officer make, and the despairing faces of the men, robbed of the last hope of escape, the shadow of the criminal's cell already upon them, came into my mind as we rushed past Willesden, and looking backward for a moment in the fitful light I saw the fateful piece of paper flutter from the detective's hand.

The officials would understand the significance of that scribbled message, and unless Providence miraculously interposed the man was doomed. To leave the train as it flew through the night at the rate of fifty miles an hour was impossible. One man had done so once, but his body was found mangled beyond recognition on the track in the morning. There was no escape, and with such passing thoughts I dismissed the matter and concentrated my attention on the work in hand.

Suddenly I was startled by an ejaculation of horror from my mate.

"Look, Ben!" he shouted, his eyes starting out from his head as he gazed into the dim light which surrounded the train like a haze, "the fool will kill himself!"

I turned, and though I prided myself on my steely nerves, the sight that met my eyes sent a cold thrill down my back and made me lean against the brake for support.

The man had swung himself out of the end of the carriage and was endeavoring to work his way, in face of the terrific back draught, toward us. Every moment I expected to see him torn from his precarious hold and dashed to pieces on the lines, but with the tenacity of a leech he clung to the handle of the door while he leaned forward to grasp some new support. Suddenly a distant roar burst on our terrified ears. My mate turned, his face as white as milk, and the perspiration standing on his forehead.

"Merciful powers!" he screamed in a harsh, discordant voice, "the 'up' mail! Heaven have mercy on him!" and he hid his face in his hands, as with a deafening shriek we flew toward each other and crashed past in the darkness, but above the din I fancied I heard the wild scream of terror as the wretched man realized his horrible peril. It was a full minute before I could turn my throbbing head behind.

With a feeling of sickness that was new to me I peered through the glass.

"Thank God!" I ejaculated fervently, as the blood rushed through the veins once more. There, with his body pressed flat against the oscillating surface, still stood the man who had been so near to an awful death. Slowly he moved his head in our direction and with an expression of grim resolution he pulled himself together. With bated breath we wondered what he would do next. As far as we could see his way was stopped, but, undeterred, he steadied himself, and, reaching forward, felt around the corner of the coach.

Unexpectedly his hand encountered one of the steps by which the men mount to the roof, and though we could not see his face distinctly, we fancied he set his lips in a terrible smile of accomplished purpose, as he clutched it and with a desperate effort pulled himself to the end of the footboard and round into comparative safety on to the couplings between the tender and the coach.

"By Jove!" Bill exclaimed, when at last, the tension removed from his nerves, he could speak. "He's a good plucked 'un, an' no mistake. But what's his game, I wonder?"

"The madman is coming on the engine," I burst out excitedly, divining his intention as I saw his head appear for a brief instant above the coal.

"Anyhow, we can't see him commit suicide without raising a hand to stop him," he returned, and began to scramble over the coal, where I saw him stoop down and grasp the man, dragging him with an almost superhuman effort on to the tender, where he sank down utterly exhausted.

Coming forward my mate threw open the stoke hole with the intention of replenishing the fire and the ruddy glow from the raging furnace within lit up the tender from end to end.

"Good heavens!" I ejaculated, as my eyes met the haggard face of the rescued delinquent. "Ernest Deval!" and my nerveless hand fell from the polished lever.

"Ben!" he gasped, wonderingly, his wild eyes encountering mine, as he struggled toward us.

My lips refused to frame the questions that tumultuously arose to them and my mate silently handed me his can.

"Take a drink," he said, curtly, "and pull yourself together."

I complied readily. The cool draught brought me round somewhat and I resumed control of the engine.

"Now, Mr. Deval," I shouted, hotly, "perhaps you will be good enough to explain the meaning of the little game you've been playing to-night, but let me tell you, if you think you've furthered your chances of escape you're wrong."

"Yes, mate," Bill sternly remarked, "you haven't done a lot for yourself by coming here."

"Ben!" he at last jerked forth, gasping for breath, his bloodshot eyes wandering round the cab and into the darkness as we flew along. "Ben, I've been a fool—you saw the detective on my track—he's in the train now—I've been betting—and you know—the books at the office—found out this morning—I've fled for my life—but you'll help me to give them the slip, Ben?" and the shivering wretch fell down helpless and clasped my knees.

"Don't talk nonsense, man," I answered, roughly; "what you ask is an impossibility. My duty as a servant of the company is to hand you over to the authorities who will be waiting for you at Crewe; beside, your own sense should tell you there is no place to hide a child here."

"Oh, yes," added my mate, grimly; "you're every bit as bad off as if you were sitting on them comfortable cushions in the carriage there. I wouldn't give much for your chance."

"But you can help me if you like!" he screamed, his eager face upturned and the hunted expression of a wild animal at bay in his eyes. "Slow up the train a little—you can do it. I've money—I will give you £50—£100—anything you like," and he pulled out a handful of glittering gold.

"It can't be done, I tell you," I replied, shaking myself free from his grasp. "Get up and be a man. You've made your bed and you will have to lie in it. No man on this earth could get out of this scrape, so make the best of it."

Seeing that I was immovable, he turned his attention to Bill, and I saw him proffer a handful of gold. My fireman turned his back and busied himself with his duties. "It's no use, matey," I heard him say, "if Ben says it can't be done it can't, and that's the end of it. I'm sorry for yer, for you're a rattling good-plucked 'un."

The despairing creature detected the tone of commiseration in Bill's voice, and redoubled his entreaties.

"If it could be done I'd do it," Bill murmured. "I've got a wife and six kids to look after at home, and that brass would come in useful, but there," and he cast his eyes around the tender. Suddenly they lit up with a peculiar light, and, turning to me, he said apologetically: "Ben, I don't ask you to have any hand in this at all. You knows nothing about it. If the worst comes to the worst, we enforced yer to silence, and all I says is this: Will you give me a chance to get the beggar off? I think I can do it without danger to you or me. All I asks yer to do is to know nothing about it. What say now?"

"Well, Bill," I remarked, "I bear the fellow no love, as you can see, but if by keeping silent I can do you a good turn to the tune of £50 you can depend on me, though I must say I don't see how you can possibly do the trick."

"You put your money on me," he returned smillingly, as he gripped my hand, and retired to the end of the tender with Deval.

We had left Stafford behind some time since, and if nothing happened should run into Crewe in another twenty-five minutes or so. Having to do Bill's work as well as control the engine, I had my hands pretty full and during the next ten minutes I was fully occupied. At the end of that time Bill rejoined me, and threw open the furnace doors once more. I looked around the engine. Deval had disappeared! Not a vestige or sign of his visit remained, but Bill's pocket bulged considerably, and his grimy face was expanded in a broad grin.

A few minutes later we slowed up at our destination for the night. There they were, just as I had expected. One policeman at the station gates and five or six stationed along the platform.

Before we had quite stopped out jumps Jobson and rushes up the train. As the sergeant threw open the door of the compartment Deval had occupied we saw an expression of consternation cross the face of the bewildered detective, but, quickly regaining his composure, he superintended the examination with a practiced eye. My mate had unfastened the couplings, and we were just off to the sheds when Jobson approached the engine.

"Ben," he queried anxiously, "did you see anything extraordinary on the way down? I've been sold nicely, and no mistake."

"I don't have time to see anything except signals ahead when I'm in charge of an express," I returned, unceremoniously. "Did you see anything, Bill?"

"Can't say as I did," Bill answered artlessly. "Have you lost your man, Mr. Jobson?"

"I have so," replied the officer. "I expect he dropped off somewhere."

"If he did he's a goner for certain," said Bill. "We were never under fifty since we left Willesden."

"I'll look along the track for him going back," I remarked. "Are you going on or back with the morning mail?"

"I hardly know," he returned, disappointedly. "Well, thank you, anyhow. "Good-night, or, rather, good-morning." And he made his way to the telegarph office.

We returned his salutation and steamed off to the sheds.

"What did I tell yer?" said Bill, joyously. "We drop him outside and let him take his chance."

"Then he is on the engine?" I asked, as we pulled up.

For answer Bill got off and went to see if the coast was clear. Returning in five minutes, he proceeded to the rear of the tender and carefully lifted up a large piece of coal. Underneath was the head of Deval! Bill had artfully wailed him in against the side, and in such a manner as to defy suspicion, little bits being scattered about in the most natural way possible.

Did I ever hear from him again? Oh, yes. About two years afterward a letter reached me one morning from Colombia, inclosing a Bank of England note for £100. It was from Deval, and in it he told how he had succeeded in doubling on his tracks to Birmingham, and thence had worked down to Southampton, in disguises, and got clear away. He expressed the hope that Alle and myself were happily wedded, and begged us to keep the note and give it as a present to our first-born child.—London Tit-Bits.

THE GOSPEL OF GRACE

EXPOUNDED BY OUR RELIGIOUS EDITOR.

Short Sermon by Phillips Brooks—Surest Recommendation to the Good-Will of People—Work in Your Home Brings Sunlight—Here and There.

The Sufficiency of Life.

WHAT business has the young vigor of 20 to demand that the fire shall be warm and the seat cushioned and the road smooth? Let him not parade his incompetence for life by insisting that life is not worth living unless a man is rich—unless, that is, the abundance of life should be eked out with wealth, which is an accident of life, not of its essence. Let him not insult himself by behaving as if the sunshine or the shower made a difference to him. Let those poor slaveries wait until the heart is soured and the knees are weak. No, the young man's place is to scorn delights. Our gilded youth are not—and they ought to know that they are not; they ought to be told that they are not—choice young men when the study of their life is to spare themselves pain and surround themselves with creature comforts. It is a sign that they have not got hold of the sufficiency of life. They do not know what pure gold is, and so they try to eke it out with gilding.—Phillips Brooks.

Honest Convictions.

The surest and safest recommendation to the good-will of people whose friendship and confidence are worth having is a straightforward and steadfast loyalty to faith and principle. Even the most uncompromising bigot, if not absolutely a fool, is capable of appreciating the merit and value of such fidelity to honest convictions, and is compelled to respect the motives and admire the courage of the man whose course is so directed. Nothing is ever permanently lost by unswerving allegiance to honor and right, but ultimate failure is inevitable where strict adherence to these standards is rashly sacrificed through motives of expediency. These are simple but essential truths which every young man who hopes to succeed must build firmly and squarely into the foundation upon which his character and future are destined to rest.

The Blessedness of Work.

If you would have sunlight in your home see that you have work in it. Nothing makes moroseness and heavy-heartedness in a house so fast as idleness. The very children gloom and sulk if they are left with nothing to do. If all have their work, they have not only their own joy in creating thought, in making thought into form, in driving on something to completion, but they have the joy of ministering to the movement of the whole house when they feel that what they do is part of a living whole. The morning is bright with the knowledge of how much has to be done. The hour of rest or play is a true joy; the evening hour, when all that has been done is talked over, is delightful; and, sleep, "sore labor's bath," is only another piece of pleasant work. All eyes in that household look forward, all its members are bright, all honor one another. Every day there is the light of something conquered in the eyes of those who work. Time, the gray shadow, takes substance, walks as a friend with those who work, and he is a charming companion when we make him out of a ghost into a reality. In such a house, if there be also the good temper of love, sunshine never ceases.

The Art of Not Hearing.

The art of not hearing should be learned by all. There are so many things which it is painful to hear, very many which, if heard, will disturb the temper, corrupt simplicity and modesty, detract from contentment and happiness. If a man falls into a violent passion and calls all manner of names, at the first words we should shut our ears and hear no more. If in a quiet voyage of life we find ourselves caught in one of those domestic whirlwinds of scolding, we should shut our ears as a sailor would furl his sail, and, making all tight, send before the gale. If a hot, restless man begins to inflame our feelings, we should consider what mischief the fiery sparks may do in our magazine below, where our temper is kept, and instantly close the door. If all the petty things said of a man by heedless and ill-natured idlers were brought home to him he would become a mere walking pincushion, stuck full of sharp remarks. If we would be happy when among good men we should open our ears; when among bad men, shut them. It is not worth while to hear what our neighbors say about our children, what our rivals say about our business, our dress or our affairs.

Why They Wanted Him.

An exchange relates as fact the following:

When Judge ——, Col. ——, and Dr. ——, the Methodist church's investigating committee, went to —— City to look up Dr. ——, who has since been given a call to the church, they got themselves into an embarrassing situation which made them think for awhile that it was not a question of whether or not they wanted Dr. ——, but, rather, whether he wanted them for parishioners.

After they had heard him preach a sermon which they all voted was one of the best gospel efforts they had ever heard, they met Dr. —— in his study and formally delivered a call. The formalities being disposed of, the minister and the committee entered upon a general discussion of the situation, in the course of which Dr. —— said that the life of a church could be largely determined by the interest the official board took in the prayer-meetings. This statement caused the committeemen to look at each other anxiously and endeavor to change the trend of the conversation.

"We have a very fine choir," said one.

"Now," said Dr. ——, "how about your of——"

"Our church is very centrally located," interrupted the second committeeman.

"Do the members of your official board," began the minister again, "take——"

"The acoustics properties of the chruch," put in No. 3, nervously, "are of the very best."

But it was all in vain, for before No. 3 could say another word Dr. —— got in his question:

"Do the members of your official board attend prayer-meeting?"

"Ah, hum," said committeeman No. 1.

"Ah, haw," said No. 2.

"Um," said No. 3.

And they all looked at each other, each one expecting some one else to act as spokesman. Finally the bravest one ventured to say, with an air of great penitence: "The truth is, Doctor, it has been a long time since any of us have been at a prayer-meeting, but we understand that one or two members of the official board sometimes go."

For a while the silence was very perceptible in that part of —— City. "Well, if that is the case," said the minister, decisively, "you don't want me."

"That is just why we want you!" exclaimed the committee in concert, grasping at the only avenue of escape from an embarrassing situation.

And perhaps that is why Dr. —— decided to come to ——.

Church and Clergy.

"Sam" Jones, the Georgia revivalist, gets $2,000 and his expenses for his month's revival work in Boston, according to the Transcript.

The Rev. Dr. William Prall, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Detroit, was married the other day to Miss Helen Lothrop, of Detroit. Dr. Prall was a rising politician of New Jersey a few years ago. He entered the Episcopal ministry, however, and for a time was rector of an Episcopal church in one of the Oranges.

It is an interesting fact, brought out by the recent anniversary of the Scotch Church, that Dr. Vermilye, so long senior pastor of the collegiate church, was at the age of 14 a student of Yale College, by the aid of funds provided by the Scotch Church. Dr. Mason, pastor of the Scotch Church, taught him Latin and Greek.

The Boston Transcript says: "The Rev. Dr. Isaac Lansing has decided to resign the pastorate of Park Street Church, but the society must pay him $3,500 for so doing, in addition to $3,000 which he claims as his salary to March 31. Dr. Lansing does not look upon the amount of money as a bonus, for he declares that the action of the church committee has placed him in an unfavorable light before other societies, which is likely to affect his future prospects seriously."

The Protestant Episcopal Church, or at least a certain section of it, is considering the advisability of employing evangelists or "lay readers" more extensively. Even the conservative Church Standard has been arguing for their employment, suggesting that there is a field where the lay evangelist is specially needed, and where the ordained minister cannot take his place. "Common sense," it says, "rebels against the notion, which is without warrant of holy scriptures, that the work of evangelization by preaching the gospel with the living voice is a peculiar prerogative of any order in the church, however sacred."

Bishop Thomas Underwood Dudley (Episcopal) of Kentucky celebrated the twenty-third anniversary of his consecration. He was born in Richmond, Va., Sept. 26, 1837; was graduated as M. A. from the University of Virginia in July, 1858; served as an officer in the army of the Confederate States; was graduated from the Theological Seminary of Virginia in 1867; was ordained deacon by Bishop Johns in that year, and priest by Bishop Whittle the following year. He is recognized as one of the ablest men in the church and is much loved and admired, not only in his diocese, but throughout the United States.

When an unmarried man is a failure, he throws the blame on his parents; a married man holds his wife responsible.

The Garden.

The margin between the possibilities and the actualities of the average farm garden is a thing of goodly dimensions. It is, naturally enough, a difficult thing for the farmer to realize to what extent of practical usefulness he may put a single acre of ground provided he is willing and careful to bestow upon it the right kind of attention. This, says West Kentucky Farmer, is so because of the fact that in his farm work he looks more to general results. But when he comes down to work on a smaller scale he finds things quite different. It is only recently that a committee took upon itself to investigate somewhat as to what was actually being done on some of the small truck farms near one of our large cities, and they reported that one farm of forty acres yielded annually $16,000 worth of fruits and vegetables; another of six acres yielded $6,000; another of ninety acres yielded $20,000, and another of twenty acres returned $8,000. These figures represent good receipts, but even after making reductions for fertilizers and other necessary expenditures, the net returns, although not stated, were no doubt handsome. Apart, however, from the profits from exclusive truck farming, the garden acre on the farm can be made an important item in the domestic economy of the home, if we take into consideration all the expense attaching to the purchase of garden produce necessary to the health, comfort and well being of the family.

Old Wheels Made Useful.

Don't throw away old wheels; they can be put to as good use, sometimes, as they were on the vehicles on which they were bought, as frequent and varied illustrations in Farm and Home each month have shown. The illustrations herewith show how wheels may be made serviceable by constructing a barrel wheelbarrow and a reel for fence wire. The barrel wheelbarrow is simply a barrel on wheels, balanced so that it will tip easily. The hooks in front are for a shovel and hoe to hang on. For many purposes this is better for farm work than are ordinary wheelbarrows. A heavier load can be carried. The wheel reel for fence wire is made by taking two wheels of a light wagon attached to their axle. Place four pieces of board through the wheels at regular intervals and wire to the felloes. It makes a large and convenient wire or cordage reel. These conveniences can be made during early spring so as to be ready for the first outdoor work.

BARREL WHEELBARROW.

FENCE WIRE WHEEL REEL.

Burn the Screenings.

Since the improved fanning mills enable the farmer to separate all the defective and broken grains while it is cleaned, there is no longer any reason for grinding or feeding screenings. They are mostly composed of weed seeds and have little nutritive value, while some kinds of weed seeds are positively injurious to stock. Least of all should such weed seeds be given to poultry with the idea that passing through the gizzard will destroy their vitality. This is not the fact. It is in the crops of migratory birds that many kinds of plants and trees have been so widely spread as they have been. As for grinding the screenings, they are no longer worth the trouble. Grain is too cheap. If some broken grain is burned with the weed seeds it is no great loss.

Ammonia for House Plants.

Every housekeeper has her bottle of "Household Ammonia" or some preparation of ammonia, beside her kitchen sink or in the bathroom. It is very useful in many ways, as the housekeeper knows. It has also another use. Fill a teacup with tepid water in the morning, and add to it three drops of household ammonia. Pour this on the soil of the geranium or other rapid-growing plant in your window. An application of this kind once or twice a week will add wonderfully to the growth and appearance of the plant. It is, in fact, a concentrated liquid fertilizer that is effective, cheap and handy. For a number of plants, twelve or fifteen drops to a quart of water is sufficient. Twice a week on a sunny morning is enough.—Agriculturist.

To Make the Farm Pay.

One of the greatest hindrances to profitable farming is a desire to go too fast at first, and to purchase things one could get along without. The obliging agents tell you that you need not trouble about the money; your note will do just as well; but you will find that you must pay big interest for the privilege of going into debt, and you are always at a disadvantage with your creditor.

Have the money ready to pay and you can then make your half of the bargain. Take good care for your farm and your stock, and they will furnish the money for the necessary outlays. I will just say to young men who expect to make farming their occupation, that they may expect hard work and plenty of it, and they will not need to join any baseball nine for exercise; but if they take care of their health and habits it will not hurt them. I have tried it for over sixty years, and am to-day a well-preserved man. I can truly say that with the blessing of our Heavenly Father upon the labors of myself and family, I have made farming pay, and what I have done others can do.—John Laramour, before Bloomingburg, Ohio, Institute.

Wells in Barn Basements.

Every basement barn built for housing stock should have a well under it. In this way water of proper warmth can be always secured for cattle, and a tub or kettle kept full all the time will add greatly to their comfort. It is well for all stock to run out of doors in cold weather for awhile each day, but the animals ought never to be forced to drink water nearly or quite down to the freezing temperature. We have scores of times seen cows turn away from the water under a hole in the ice because they were so chilled that further drinking of icy water was impossible. Much of the lack of thrift of cattle in winter is due to drinking ice cold water, and will be remedied by having a supply of water from a well in the barn basement.—American Cultivator.

Feed for Bone and Muscle.

In feeding all young animals thrifty growth is much more important than to fatten them. Many people suppose that the only way to lessen fat is to restrict diet until near starvation point. But they find by trial that if the food given contains the fat-forming nutrition, restricting its amount makes what is given so much better digested that the fattening process goes on as before. A far surer and better way to accomplish what is wished is to give food plentifully, but not of the kind that builds up fat, and especially to give what makes bone and muscle. It is for this reason that wheat bran and wheat middlings are so valuable for feeding. They will not fatten if fed moderately with hay, straw or roots, and they will keep young stock thriftily growing.

Cleanings.

A great advance in theory and fact has been made over the old notion that good beeves could not be made before they are 4 years old. Better blood, breeding and management now make them most profitable at half that age.

A consensus of opinion among poultry keepers is that buckwheat is an excellent food for fowls. Some ascribe their profit to its use, briefly. Of course, this means that all the other conditions of care and food are properly supplied.

Old sheep are more profitable than young ones as long as they are healthy. It is claimed by some that any sheep failing to regain her flesh properly after her lamb is sold should not be kept, as there is danger of her not living through the next lambing.

No animal upon the farm requires so long a time to overcome the effects of over-feeding as does the sheep, and when a steady gain is necessary in fattening special care must be taken in regard to this point. There is the same risk in feeding growing lambs.

The Dairy.

Sudden changes in feed will cause the cows to shrink in milk.

A good remedy for swollen teat on a milk cow, is equal parts of glycerine and lobelia.

The food for the cows should be of such a nature that no bad taste will be imparted to the milk.

Raise all the feed you can for your cows at home on your own ground. In that way you can get good money for the crops themselves.

The importance of healthy cows and sound milk cannot be overestimated. Too little attention has been given to the matter in the past.

In addition to corn meal, the cow needs something more nitrogenous in her feed. A combination of corn meal, gluten and cotton seed meal gives much better results than the former only. It will make one-third more milk and be better in quality.

Nervousness and viciousness are engendered in the illtreated cow, and are transmitted to her offspring. The more docile the cow, the more are her energies likely to be devoted to the dairyman's interest. We cannot be too watchful over irresponsible help.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR,

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, APRIL 23 1897

The Rothchilds have recently bought a group of silver mines in New Mexico. It looks as though they intended to secure all the silver mines and then bull the white metal.

The new Canadian census shows the surprising fact that seventeen in every thousand of the Canadian population were born in the United States. This is seven more in the thousand than the number reported from all European countries outside of Great Britian.

A telegram from Constantinople, dated the 18th inst., states that on that day the Porte communicated an official note to the newspapers stating that war had been declared against Greece. The note adds that Prince Mavrocordato, the Greek minister to Turkey, was handed his passports yesterday, and Assim Bey, Turkish minister to Greece had been recalled. This is an event which may possibly lead to very serious European complications in the case that in the face of this war the concert of the Powers cannot be maintained. The probable immediate issue is that Greece will be beaten, owing to the immensely superior strength of the Turks. But will the conflict end there? It is self evident that statesmen of the great Powers have been unable to prevent these two nations from quarreling, and will they be able to keep the Christian people they respresent from fighting over such a rich prize as Moslem Turkey triumphing over Christian Greece? At present trade throughout the rest of Europe is in a prosperous condition, and the general feeling of all is to avoid wars at every cost. If anything is done to take away the Sultan's power it will be probably by means of the interference of the most interested nations to establish an international commission to guide Turkish affairs, backed by the arms of the various powers.

Christian Churches seem to be getting farther from Christ every year. That this is so is borne out by the following telegram from Trenton, New Jersey. The congregation referred to, and the minister who presides over the flock do not seem to be overcome with that meek and lowly spirit which characterized the life of Him who was born in a manger:

Miss Ray West, a member of the first Baptist Church and the daughter of a prominent and wealthy family here, walked out of church last night branded by her fellow-members as an "habitual liar and slanderer." She had been tried before the Advisory Committee of the church for circulating stories about the pastor, Rev. Maurice Fikes, and had been found guilty.

Although many members of the Committee had said in the meeting that they believed the young woman's intellect was impaired, the Committee drafted resolutions intended to cut her off from the fellowship of the church.

And yet these same people, who, would blacken the character and blight the life of a poor girl who is probably irresponsible for word or act, pose as Christian reformers and draw the line at kinetoscope pictures and even at nearly all kinds of athletic sports.

We will wager that there is not a John L. Sullivan, a J. J. Corbett, a Bob Fitzsimmons, nor even a Tom Sharkey, in that congregation. If there were, that poor imbecile young woman would have had a champion, who would have seen that she had a "square deal."

These men may be "brutes," but they are not lost to all sense of honor and chivalry.—Bee.

In former times the punishment of the bagno (bath), one of the most cleverly cruel inflictions ever devised by an official of the torture chamber was administered in Italy, probably in Venice, where the water of the lagoons played so important a part in its penal system. The prisoner was placed in a vat the sides of which were slightly in excess of the average hight of a man. In order to hold in check the rising tide of a supply of water which ran into the vat in a constant stream the criminal was furnished with a scoop with which to bail out the water as fast as it came in.

The respite from death by immersion thus obtained was more or less prolonged according to the powers of endurance possessed by the victim. But imagine the moral torture, the exhausting and even hideously grotesque efforts, the incessant and pitiless toil by night and day to stave off the dread moment, fast approaching, when overcome by sleep and fatigue, he was unable to struggle any longer against his fate.

In these latter days we have improved on the bagno. We have devised a system of industry in which the producer is permitted to retain about one-tenth of that which he creates. The only way in which the producer can exist is by continued exertion, and we have so adjusted the scheme that if he works too hard an "over-production" is created and he is sentenced to idleness and pauperism. If he stops working he starves; if he continues to work he will "over-produce." The harder he works the faster the waters of poverty arise to engulf him. Just at the moment when the waters are closing over his head "charity" bails out the barrel. Of course at times charity is busy and forgets, and the man drowns. But there are plenty of men, and the excitement consists in the chance of life or death in the intermittent rise of the merciless waters and the bailing-out process by charity. Some people call this the "competitive system."—Miner-Index.

YANEY—At Bishop, April 18, 1897, Hannah, beloved wife of I. P Yaney and mother of B. H., W. P., Putnam and Ray Yaney, Mrs. W. Adams and Mrs. N. E. Conklin, aged about 60 years.

Don't forget the dance Tuesday night.

Mrs. Grace Church arrived at Citrus on Monday last

Joe Buckwalter came in from Beveridge a few days ago for a load of supplies.

A regular old-fashioned wind storm prevailed throughout the valley yesterday.

B. H. Yandell, Esq., of Independence, has received an appointment as Deputy Assessor.

B. H. Yandell and Harry Floyd went to Bishop on Monday last, returning Wednesday.

Morton George came down from Bishop on Friday evening last, returning next morning.

A hello line has been put in between the Reward Company's office and the mine, which is about a mile distant.

J. J. Gunn left for his mine Monday afternoon and Tuesday morning Mrs. Gunn accompanied by her little daughter Helen departed for San Francisco on a visit to relatives.

Monday next will be the last day allowed by law in which to pay the second installment of taxes. If not paid at that time, you will be forced to pay the penalty of your neglect.

LOST.—Between Independence and Citrus a package containing a suit of clothes. The finder will be suitably rewarded by returning the same to the store of Nathan Rhine, Independence.

It is reported that a walking match between Al Briggs and J. H. Dehy, of Bishop, will take place in the near future. The course traveled will be from Bishop to Independence, with no stop-over checks.

Supervisor Fitzgerald, Road Commissioner of District No. 5, sends us word that the road to Panamint, by way of Shepherd's canyon, will soon be fixed and will be condition for hauling freight over by the 10th of May.

W. W. Van Arsdale, superintendent of the smelter at Swansee on the shore of Owens Lake years ago, and D. W. Earl, well-known in Esmeralda as a freighter, are two of the projectors of a new railroad in Siskiyou county, this State.

The San Francisco Grand Jury, and the press of that city, speak highly of Capt. E. A. Reddy's management of the Almshouse. He has made many improvements and has kept the expenses of that institution within the appropriation.

The Reward Mine still continues to add her quota of the precious metal to the circulating medium. Last Saturday Supt. Hoskins brought in bar No. 32, valued at about $1,500. Another carload of concentrates was shipped during the week.

On Sunday, April 25th, religious services will be held as follows: Independence in the morning at 11 o'clock a. m.; Lone Pine in the evening at 7:30 o'clock. All are cordially invited.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

Three big teams loaded with merchandise for our valley merchants arrived in town Tuesday. Eugene Mallory was loaded with goods for this place, and Rudolph Schober and Harry Meads went on to Bishop with the remainder of their freight.

A Lodge of the Knights of Pythias was inaugurated at Bishop on the night of the 19th inst. The ceremony we understand was both interesting and entertaining and lasted until the early hours of the morning. About 20 members were initiated.

The bodies of the two Chinamen who were caught by a cave in a mine at Cerro Gordo two weeks ago have not yet been recovered. Men have been searching for the unfortunates ever since the accident occurred but without success, and it is thought that where they are now entombed will be their last resting place.

In the early hours of Tuesday morning a shed back of Bourland's Hotel, at Bishop, caught fire and caused some alarm to the inmates, who were awakened by the glare and cres of fire. The bucket brigade was soon on hand and the fire extinguished before any considerable damage had been done.

Pat Keys came in from his mine at Beveridge a few days ago. Mr. Keys has recently purchased a 6-horse power gasoline engine, which he will soon have placed in position at his mill, when the work of crushing ore will commence. He has sufficient ore on the dump to keep his mill running steadily for a year at least. The mine is looking first-rate and the chances are very favorable that it will continue to be a valuable bullion producer for years to come.

Story of Murder Denied.

A dispatch to the San Francisco Call of April 13th, says: Several prospectors who arrived from Ballarat last night deny the story that three men were found dead in Death Valley. The story of the triple murder by Panamint Tom is without foundation.

On Saturday Ed. Reid returned to Randsburg from Ballarat and made the statement that a prospector had come into the new camp with the news that three dead men were found in Death Valley, about forty miles from Ballarat, and the supposition was that they were shot by Panamint Tom. Reid thought the murdered men were Rhay, Sanborn and Davis, the three Colorado prospectors who were sent out by local capitalists. The men had a four-horse load of provisions that would last at least six months.

Early on Sunday morning the residents of Randsburg were startled at hearing that William J. Langdon, Louis Goldsmith and a man named Parker were killed near Panamint

Every endeavor was made to show that Langdon's party could not have been near there, as it had left Randsburg only last Thursday, and could not have reached Ballarat, eighty miles distant, before Friday evening. Several of the late arrivals saw and spoke to the members of the Langdon party late Friday evening, and Langdon was then going to his camp, about six miles above Ballarat. Panamint Tom was in Ballarat on Saturday, and took dinner with Charles H. Treat, one of the men who arrived here last night.

William J. Langdon was one of the original discoverers of Randsburg and has a large circle of friends [Ballarat, Death Valley and Panamint are all in this county, and had any such crime as reported taken place, our Sheriff would certainly have been apprised of the fact. Parties from Southern Inyo, who left that section of country after the crime was reported to have been committed, have been in Independence and say there is no foundation for such a rumor.

Splendid Growing Weather.

Splendid growing weather. Couldn't be better. It would ripen a porcelain egg into a brood of poultry. So infectious with procreative power is it in this soil that one could graft divine grace on a stalk of Sonora wheat and grow a ton of preachers. For astonishing prolificacy there is nothing like it, neither in geometrical progression nor in that domestic sociability of the sexes which characterizes the never ending honeymoon of the jack rabbit. The rains have done their work and done it well, and now a warm sun, which was 70 degrees in the shade several days this week, is feeding with heat and light the great green fields of grain that are serving advance notice on the warehouses for more room and greater storage capacity than ever asked for before. There never was such a promise of crops made jointly and severally by an affluent sun and a solvent rain, and there is very little danger of the latter permitting its end of the obligation go to protest. With a few more showers next month the farmer can set about preparing a place to hide his profits in.—Sanger Herald

The same climatic conditions prevail here. The late warm days have done wonders for our grain and alfalfa crops. There is sufficient snow on the mountains to furnish a bountiful supply of water for irrigating purposes. Our fruit trees are a vast bouquet of blossoms, and everything points to a most prosperous and profitable year for our farmers and stockmen.

Memorial Day Observance.

Saturday last, 10th inst., a meeting of the Union veterans was held at the courthouse in Bishop for the purpose of making suitable arrangements for the observance of Memorial Day. All necessary committees were appointed and are at work. It is hoped that veterans, no matter what colors they wore, will join in the services of the day. The snow that is gathering on our heads will never melt. "Taps" will soon sound for all of us. Until then, let us each year on Memorial Day meet to honor our dead, and to deepen our reverence for their worth; to renew our pledge of loyalty to our country and our flag. The day is eloquent with patriotism which does not speak only from the lips.

It is the wish of the "old boys" that the children from the schools, and all organized societies, join us. We hope especially to have the children with us, as the future (and near future) observances of the day will be in the hands of those who are now children.

The 30th of May comes on Sunday so we decided that Saturday, the 29th, should be kept instead This accommodates the greatest number of those living at the greatest distance. There will be another meeting held at the courthouse to complete any unfinished business on Saturday, May 15th.

VETERAN.

Special Land Agents Laid Off.

Twenty-one special agents of the U. S. General Land Office were dismissed temporarily on the 12th of the month, owing to lack of sufficient Government money appropriated to compensate them for their services. The appropriations which will be made available in July will enable the department to re-employ all the dismissed officials, but there is some question whether the men laid off will be reappointed. Many of them are said to be Democrats, and it is intimated that Republicans will be put in their places.

Mr. W. S. Greene who was here last week was notified to cease operations on that account.

A Tennessee man accidentally shot a dog, and in trying to explain to the owner how it occurred accidentally shot him. In a further effort of illustration he accidentally shot the coroner, and is now out on bail trying to find somebody to whom he may explain the latter occurrence.

THE ESTRAY LAW.

A New Law That Will be of Interest to All Our Farmers.

WAY PROVIDED FOR HANDLING STOCK FOUND AT LARGE.

It is a Costly Method, But it is Better Than no Law. Good Title Can be Secured.

The estray law passed by the last legislature will be of interest to many of our readers consequently we publish it in full:

Section 1. Any person finding at any time any estray domestic animal or animals upon his premises or highways adjacent thereto may take up the same, and no person shall remove them from the possession of the taker-up, or from the possession of the officer to whom they may have been delivered, except as hereinafter provided.

Section 2. Any person taking up an estray animal or animals, shall confine the same in a secure place, and within five days file with the county recorder of the county in which such estray is found, a notice containing a description of the animal or animals taken up, with the marks and brands, if they have any, together with the probable value of each animal and a statement of the place where the taker-up found, and where he has confined the same. The county recorder shall receive for filing said notice the sum of fifty cents.

Section 3. At any time within thirty days from the date of the filing of the notice specified in section two of this act, any person claiming such estray animal or animals, shall appear before a justice of the peace of the township wherein said animal or animals were found, and make claim for such estray animal or animals. The justice shall enter such claim in his docket, and shall notify the taker-up, and within five days after the making of such claim, the justice shall hear the claim and such evidence as may be produced by either party, and shall determine the case according to the rights of the parties both with reference to the ownership and possession of the estray animal or animals, and the compensation to be paid to the taker up and cost of the proceedings. Such compensation shall be estimated as follows:

1. The total amount paid by the taker-up to the county recorder.

2. The sum of 15 cents per day for the keeping and care of each horse, mule, jenny, ass, cow, bull, ox, steer or calf.

3. The sum of 5 cents per day for each sheep, goat, hog, or other animal not hereinbefore specified.

The sum of $1 shall be paid to the justice of the peace by the party or parties making such claim, for each claim made and entered by him as aforesaid, which shall be in full compensation for all services rendered by him in connection with each claim so made.

Section 4. If the owner does not appear and claim the animal or animals taken up within thirty days after the filing of the notice hereinbefore mentioned, then the taker-up shall, in writing, notify a constable of the township in which said animal or animals are held, which notice shall specify that he has complied with all the provisions of this act, and that the owner of said animal or animals has failed to appear and claim the same as herein provided, and that such animal or animals are held by him subject to sale. Said constable shall immediately proceed to sell such animal or animals at public sale, in conformity with the law concerning sale on execution, and shall be entitled to the same fees as are provided by law for sales under execution.

Section 5. Out of the money realized for the sale of estrays, the constable shall first retain his fees, he shall then pay to the taker up his costs and expenses, estimated as provided in section 3 of this act, or so much thereof as the funds in his hands will permit, and the surplus, if any, he shall pay to the county treasurer, to be held by him for the owner of the estray or estrays, for which it was received in payment. If any person or persons shall, within one year thereafter, prove to the satisfaction of the board of supervisors of the county in which the estray or estrays were sold, that he or they are entitled to the sum held by the county treasurer, or any part thereof, the said board of supervisors shall order such sum to be paid over to such person or persons; and if not so proven within one year then the same shall become a part of the common school fund of said county.

Section 6. All sales made by any constable under the provisions of this act, shall convey a good and valid title to the purchaser, and the owner of the estray so sold shall thereafter be barred from all right to recover the same.

Section 7. The taker-up of an estray animal or animals shall use reasonable care to preserve the same from injury, but if any estray animals die or escape from the possession of the taker-up at any time before the expiration of the time specified in section 3 of this act, the taker-up shall not be held liable in any manner on account of such animal.

Section 8. Nothing in this act shall affect the laws or regulations in force or which may be in force regarding estray, the poundkeeper, or other pound officer, within the limits of any city or town where laws regarding estrays are in force.

Section 9. All other acts and parts of acts relating to estrays, now in force are hereby repealed.

Section 10. This act shall take effect from and after its passage.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Walter A Lamar, Judge.

SATURDAY, April 17, 1897.

People vs. Ted Birchim, an Indian—Found guilty of an assault and sentenced to serve a term of three months in the County Jail.

People, plaintiff, vs. Frank Elijah, defendant—On trial. The above action occupied the Court until Wednesday evening, April 21, 1897. The following jury, after receiving the instructions of the Judge, were out about ten minutes and returned a verdict of "Not Guilty." Wm. C. Bulpitt, J. B. Clarke, G. L. Albright, J. W. Bentley, Wm. McLaren, Mathias Merten, Wm. G. Morton, Geo. Hall, Sr., Peter M. Laberge, Edward Schober, Michael McSweeney, John Dugan.

Rebekah Dance.

The dance of the season will be given next Tuesday evening, April 27, 1897, at Mairs' Hall, by Olive Rebekah Lodge No. 222. Old Doctor Blair will be master of ceremonies, and as he spares no pains or trouble in making a success of everything he undertakes, a real, good old-fashioned time is assured. Everybody is invited. COMMITTEE.

Americans are the most inventive people on earth. To them have been issued nearly 600,000 patents, or more than one-third of all the patents issued in the world. No discovery in modern years has been of greater benefit to mankind than Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, or has done more to relieve pain and suffering. J. W. Vaughn of Oakton, Ky., says: "I have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy in my family for several years, and find it to be the best medicine I ever tried for cramps in the stomach and bowels. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Two years ago R. J. Warren, a druggist at Pleasant Brook, N. Y., bought a small supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sums up the result as follows: "At that time the goods were unknown in this section; to-day Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a household word." It is the same in hundreds of communities. Wherever the good qualities of Chamberlains's Cough Remedy become known the people will have nothing else. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

TOO MUCH BARK.

It is not the best watchdog that barks the most. The old watchdog lays low and seizes the burglar before he knows it. In the treatment of rheumatism many sufferers talk too much and do too little. If they want to find out what is best for it, let them get St. Jacobs Oil and use it. It is a good watchdog against the intrusion of pain. It goes to work quickly and surely, and seizes hold of rheumatism for the purpose of driving it out, and holds on until its purpose is accomplished. It is, therefore, the best remedy, because it takes the best means to accomplish its end, as many who have suffered for years with the ailment will testify. The cure is the same in chronic or inflammatory cases. With patience and a free use of it, the worst cases of long standing have been finally cured by it.

Where Lincoln Was Born.

Efforts are being made to sell to the government for $50,000 the farm of 112 acres near Hodgenville, Ky., on which Abraham Lincoln was born. The present owner of the property is a citizen of New York, who bought it not many years ago for $3,000. The little one room log cabin which for a time served as Thomas Lincoln's home stands today practically as it was in 1809, but it contains no furniture or other relics dating anywhere near back to that year.

Ample Protection.

The New Mexico council has passed a law requiring every sleeping car passing through the territory to carry safes for the protection of the passengers' valuables, and Mr. Pullman responds by threatening to lock the doors of all his cars when they are passing through the territory. Between the two powers the passengers ought to be well protected from all robbers except the porter.—Charleston News and Courier.

Two Obstacles.

One of Congressman Sulloway's constituents in New Hampshire wrote him the other day about a pension bill. Mr. Sulloway replied:

"Only two obstacles stand in the way of passing your bill—Jehovah and Tom Reed. I think I can manage Jehovah if you will look after Reed."

Mr. Sulloway has not yet received a reply to his letter.—Washington Post.

OVER THE PRECIPICE

Hosts of invalids tumble to destruction simply because they will exercise no discretion in the matters of eating, drinking and the avoidance of exciting causes, and, above all, in the item of medication. They persist in dosing themselves in season and out of season with drastic and violent remedies, opiates and mineral poisons. The best, the safest, the pleasantest substitute for such hurtful no-remedies is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, potent for malarial, rheumatic, dyspeptic, nervous and bilious complaints.

"I never could understand how people have the nerve to marry again after being divorced." "Oh, it merely shows how sure they are that the other party was to blame."

Malaria and Grip positively cured; also all other Medical and surgical cases guaranteed a cure or no charge. Reasonable terms; call or write; confidential. DR. CRAIG & CO., Medical Institute, 1346 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters searches out all impurities and expels them harmlessly through the natural channels from the system.

A GREAT deal of nonsense has been written—and believed, about blood purifiers. What purifies the blood? .. .. ..

THE KIDNEYS PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND THEY ALONE.

If diseased, however, they cannot, and the blood continually becomes more impure. Every drop of blood in the body goes through the kidneys, the sewers of the system, every three minutes, night and day, while life endures.

Sanol Cure

puts the kidneys in perfect health, and nature does the rest.

The heavy, dragged out feeling, the bilious attacks, headaches, nervous unrest, fickle appetite, all caused by poisoned blood, will disappear when the kidneys properly perform their functions.

There is no doubt about this. Thousands have so testified. The theory is right, the cure is right and health follows as a natural sequence.

The Road to Wealth.

A gentleman saw the following advertisement in a paper: "The road to wealth. Send twelve stamps to ——" The gentleman sent twelve stamps, and in return for his outlay received minute instructions how to get to the Bank of England from any part of London.—Tit-Bits.

Did Him a Favor.

Pedestrian (to footpad)—Money or my life, is it? I was wondering how I was going to live through this week. Now I won't have to. Very kind of you. Shoot away.—Boston Transcript.

Noah's Claim to Wisdom.

Teacher—Who was the wisest man?

Tommy—Noah.

"Noah?"

"Yes'm. He was the only man who knew enough to come in when it rained."—Indianapolis Journal.

It Depends.

"Do you think," said the young man who had gone into politics, "that a man in my position can afford to be indifferent to public opinion?"

"I don't know," said Senator Sorghum, thoughtfully. "How much is your private income?"—Washington Star.

An Exigency Provided For.

Chambermaid (rushing in)—Please, mum, the cook's fell down the cellar and broke her arm!

Lady of the house (quickly)—I'll have it taken out of her wages.—New York Journal.

Plain and Blunt.

"I'm a plain, blunt man, Margarete, and can frame no honeyed speeches. Wil you marry me?"

"I'm a little on the plain, blunt order, myself. No!"—Detroit Free Press.

No Fixed Rule.

"You cawn't set down no fixed rule o' conduct in this life," said old Wiggins, the Barley Mow orator. "Samson got into trouble 'cause he got 'is hair cut, and Absalom got into trouble 'cause he didn't."—Tid-Bits.

Reparation.

John Butts, Sr.—I want to leave my property to my two sons—one tenth to my youngest son, John Butts, and nine-tenths to my eldest son, Royal Chesterfield Chauncey de Peyster Butts.

Family Lawyer—H'm! Do you think that's quite fair?

John Butts, Sr.—Yes; I want to make some kind of reparation to Royal for allowing his mother to give him such a crack-law name.—Tit-Bits.

An Exciting Game.

Mamma—Oh, Billy! Don't you know it is cowardly to strike your little brother?

Billy (indignantly)—I'm not acting like a coward. I'm pretending I'm his papa, and I'm punishing him.—Harper's Bazar.

A Good Thing.

One Matron—Since I have been married I have taught my husband good taste.

Another—Really? It was a good thing that you did not teach him before you were married.—Tid-Bits.

The Only Drawback.

Visitor—There is a panel in my new dining room that that would just fit.

Hungry Artist—Most happy, I'm sure.

Visitor—Only, when the room is paid for, I shall have no money for pictures.—Harper's Bazar.

Had Him Cut Down.

Tenderfoot—Is Slippery Sam hanging around here nowadays?

Alkali Abe—Naw. He was, but the Mayor had him cut down yist'day mawnin'.—New York Journal.

Poor Boy.

Rev. Dr. Choker—Ah, what a sweet little girl, and what a pretty dress she has! Will the little pet tell the minister her name?

The Little Pet—Arfer Fwederwick Wobinson.—Harlem Life.

Naturally.

Nurse Girl—I lost track of the child, mum, and—"

Mistress—Good gracious! Why didn't you speak to a policeman?

Nurse Girl—I wuz speaking to wan all the tolme, mum.—London Pearson's Weekly.

Quite Prepared.

Doctor (sympathetically)—I trust you are prepared for the worst.

Weeping Wife—Quite. I had some lovely mourning bargains last week at Crepe & Wede's selling off.—Illustrated Bits.

Of Course.

"A horse is no good any more," declared the bicycle dealer; "I ride him an hour and he's tired."

"Yes, but one of your durned machines is allus tired before you start to ride it," replied the farmer, who was just looking around.—Detroit Free Press.

The Brute.

She—Is my hat on straight, dear?

He—I don't see how in the nature of things it can be.

She—And why, pray?

He—Because your head isn't.—Boston Courier.

His Caliber.

Nora—Oh, guess what? George promised to buy a bicycle built for two.

Cora—I presume he meant two dollars.

Reason to Like Her.

Preacher—How do you like your new mamma, Johnnie?

Johnnie—Oh, purty good. I et a jar of plums yistaday and she blamed it on the hired girl.—Cleveland Leader.

At Last.

Jack—Hurrah, Mamie! We can get married now. Union stock is going up like lightning.

Mamie—Oh, Jack! And have you some?

Jack—No; but our father has."—New York World.

Awfully Slow!

He—Darling, I have loved you ever since first we met.

She—Well, why didn't you say so long ago? Did you think I was a mind-reader?—Cleveland Leader.

Their Reflections.

Mrs. Gray—Mr. Soule is going to preach to-morrow. I wouldn't miss hearing him for anything."

Mrs. Greene—I'm awfully sorry I shan't be able to go."

Mrs. Gray (after saying good-by)—No wonder she doesn't want to be seen in that shabby old cape again.

Mrs. Greene—Got a new bonnet or something, I suppose.—Boston Transcript.

Information.

"Young man," said a wealthy city man to his spendthrift nephew, "I laid the first foundation of my fortune by saving cab-fares."

"I didn't know you ever drove one, uncle," remarked the youth.—Tid-Bits.

The Piano Salesman.

Mrs. Reckets (interestedly)—Have you taken the young gentleman to board whom I see around your house so much lately?

Mrs. Vanwart (wearily)—No; he is merely trying to sell us a piano.—New York Journal.

No Greenhorn.

Boat official—To put out that electric light turn it off the same as you would gas.

Pat—Av coorse! Ol'm no granehorn; but yez mey lave me a few matches in case Ol wants t' loight it agin.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Hard on Hubby.

An exchange announces, on the death of a lady, that "she lived fifty years with her husband and died in confident hope of a better life."—Texas Sifter.

A Crusty Opinion.

"Uncle Theophilus, what is a grass widow?"

"Well, she's a widow whose husband didn't have to die to get rid of her."—Detroit Free Press.

Modern Improvements.

House Hunter—Seems to me this house isn't very well built. The floor shakes when we walk.

Agent—Um—yes; that's the new kind of spring floor for dancing, you know.

House Hunter—And those stairs creak terribly.

Agent—Y-e-s; we furnish this new patent burglar alarm staircase without extra charge.—Boston Traveler.

How the Day Was Won.

"Sire," quoth the chief of staff, "the Amazons are assembling on the right wing and evidently intend to turn our left with a vigorous charge."

"Do you mean the Amazonian wheel corps?"

"Yes, sire; and they are a gallant sight. Their wheels have all been nickeled and they have donned their new ashes of roses bloomers for the first time. What shall we do to avert the danger?"

"Order out the royal sprinkling carts."

"Yes, sire."

"Let them make the battle ground in front of our left wing as muddy as possible."

"Yes, sire."

"Just as soon as the charging Amazons in their new silk bloomers strike that mud they will whirl about and ride back as fast as they can pedal."

"For what, sire?"

"For their mud guards, stupid. Then if we advance rapidly enough to surprise them before they can get their helmets on straight, the day is ours."

And it was even so.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

TWO INAUGURATIONS

McKINLEY'S COST ABOUT $2,550,000, JEFFERSON'S ABOUT $5,000.

These Sums Include Cost to Sightseers at Both Ceremonies—A Historical Contrast Between the Incoming of the First President of the Century and the Last.

This is a conservative estimate of the cost of the McKinley inauguration to the president elect personally, to the citizens of the District of Columbia, to the visitors and to the government:

Mr. McKinley's special train from Canton	$1,500
Mr. and Mrs. McKinley's hotel expenses at Washington	500
Mrs. McKinley's ball gown	500
Mrs. McKinley's inauguration costume	200
Six evening gowns at $250 each	1,500
Mr. McKinley's inauguration outfit	800
Total personal expenses	$4,800
Cost of ceremonies at the capitol, erection of platforms, decorations, etc., at public expense	$5,000
Cost to government in salaries of pension officials and clerks temporarily idle, though under pay, during use of pension building for festivities	70,000
Estimated cost in loss of services, retransfer of records, tracing or replacing lost records	15,000
Total cost to government through this interruption	$90,000
Expenses of citizens of the District of Columbia on account of ball, music, printing, etc., guaranteed and raised by subscriptions	$80,000
Cost to private parties for erection of reviewing stands, $8,000, less $4,300 paid for privileges by speculators	3,700
Estimated amount paid by private parties for seats at inauguration ceremonies, parades, etc	80,000
Cost of transportation to visitors from out of town (estimated by railroad officials—Pennsylvania railroad, 80,000; Baltimore and Ohio railroad, 30,000; Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, 20,000; Southern railroad, 10,000; total number of visitors, 140,000, at an average per capita transportation cost of $10)	1,400,000
Cost of lodging and meals to visitors at 20 each	840,000
Cost of tickets to inaugural ball	50,000
Six thousand suppers, wine, etc., average of $2	12,000
Flowers	5,000
Public carriages at $2 per call	20,000
Total expenses of visitors	$2,467,000
Grand total	$2,555,500

Thomas Jefferson was the first president inaugurated at Washington. For four months previous he had presided over the senate, during the second session of the Sixth congress, the first to meet in Washington, lodging at Conrad's boarding house, within a stone's throw of the capitol. The north wing had then been so far completed as to be occupied by the senate, and the house met in a temporary brick building in the south wing, called at the time the oven.

The senate met at 10 o'clock, Senator Hillhouse of Connecticut presiding. A quiet, dignified little man advanced to the desk and was received by the vice president, who administered the oath of office. Aaron Burr repeated it after him and took his seat in the chair as vice president. There was no formality. The onlooker would not have been aware of any change except that the two men had changed places.

A little later President Jefferson left his lodgings on foot in his ordinary dress, his appearance being very much like that of a tall, raw boned farmer, and walked across the square to the capitol. He was accompanied only by Secretaries Dexter and Stoddart of John Adams' cabinet and several members of the house. President Adams had fled from the city, leaving only the secretaries of the treasury and navy to turn over the government to his successor.

Into the north wing the new president walked with his little company of friends. Vice President Burr arose and greeted him, seating him in the center chair on the platform, Chief Justice Marshall occupying that at Jefferson's left and Burr that at his right. After a short pause, to let the small audience quiet down, Jefferson rose and read his inaugural. When he had finished, he turned to Marshall, who administered the oath. The ceremony was over.

Jefferson then returned to Conrad's boarding house, where he was congratulated by a few foreign agents in Washington and his friends.

John Davis, an Englishman, published a lying book of American travel in 1803, in which he asserted that he saw Jefferson ride on horseback to the capitol, hitch his horse to the palings and go in and take the oath. Davis was not in this country at the time, and, though the story is untrue, it will live. Charge d'Affaires Thornton wrote to Lord Grenville that Jefferson was "escorted by a body of militia artillery" in his walk across the square, but this was an error caused by a visit of a platoon of Virginia militia to the city. The inauguration was of the simplest kind, yet full of dignity.

Personal expenses of Thomas Jefferson on his inauguration as president	None
Cost to government	None
Expenses of coaching and stage parties to the national capital and entertainments there	$5,000

Gold Standard For Japan.

The Japanese government has decided to adopt the gold money standard. The mint ratio between gold and silver has been fixed at 32½ to 1. The silver yen, or dollar, will be withdrawn gradually from circulation, and the smallest gold piece will be of the value of 5 yen. The new standard will go into operation next October.

Health in March, April, May!

Use the Only Spring Remedy in the World That has Stood Every Test of Time.

Paine's Celery Compound Makes One Well.

In March, April and May use Paine's celery compound.

And only Paine's celery compound! For it is nature's remedy.

Do not for a moment confound it with any of the ignorant, catchpenny, short-lived patent remedies—sarsaparillas, nervines and tonics that bear as much resemblance to Paine's celery compound as the parasite vines do to the oaks that they live on.

Paine's celery compound cures disease. It makes people well. It has saved the lives of thousands of sufferers. It makes the weak strong.

It purifies the blood and enriches the nerves.

Every condition of winter life has been detrimental to health. There has been a steady decline in nervous vigor. Now that spring comes the body is ready to cast off unhealthy tissues if it is only given a chance. This opportunity comes when the excretory organs, kidneys, skin and bowels are made to work actively and the nerves are able to furnish sufficient energy to the digestive organs.

No remedy in the world accomplishes these results like Paine's celery compound. It nourishes, regulates and invigorates the entire nervous system from the brain to the minutest nerve filament. It causes an increased appetite and tones up the stomach to deal with the increased food. Its nourishing action is immediately manifest in a clearing up of the muddy, unhealthy skin, an increase in weight and more refreshing sleep.

First discovered after laborious, scientific research by the ablest physician America has produced, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., of Dartmouth college, it is prescribed and publicly indorsed by the best practitioners in every city of America. It has been so enthusiastically recommended by grateful men and women in every walk of life that it is to-day in every sense the most popular remedy the world ever knew.

It has proven itself the greatest of all spring medicines.

In New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis and two or three other large cities, the leading newspapers making their own canvasses again this year, have found that the demand for Paine's celery compound surpasses that of all other remedies together!

Paine's celery compound, taken during the early spring days, has even more than its usual remarkable efficacy in making people well. It makes short work of disease. It rapidly drives out neuralgia, sleeplessness, dyspepsia and rheumatism from the system. It removes that lassitude, or "tired feeling," which betokens weakened nerves and poor blood.

Women working in close offices, saleswomen tired out and nervous from long hours' standing on their feet and waiting on impatient, irritating customers; overworked, worried and disheartened men and women of everywhere will be astonished to find how much happier life becomes when their nerves have been strengthened and their blood purified by means of this great remedy.

No other remedy has the hearty approval of a like body of educated men and women and professional men, nor has there ever been a remedy that was welcomed in so many intelligent, prudent homes where pains is taken to get only the best in so vital a matter. In such families all over the country Paine's celery compound is the first, last and only remedy used.

Prof. Phelps had studied the nerves in health and disease, when well nourished and when under-nourished, in men and women and children years before he looked for the remedy. Paine's celery compound is the outcome of his entire professional life. It is the one remedy that the world could not lose to-day at any price.

Paine's celery compound induces the body to take on solid flesh.

Physicians recognize Paine's celery compound as the one scientific spring remedy, and it is universally prescribed by them wherever there is great need of a vigorous and prompt restoring of health and strength to the worn out system.

Paine's celery compound is the best spring remedy because it is more than a mere spring remedy. It brings about a healthy appetite, complete digestion, regular action of the bowels and the other excretory organs whenever taken, whether in summer or in winter, but as the greatest of spring remedies it has extraordinary opportunities for inducing the body to throw off morbid humors that poison it and cause rheumatism, neuralgia, heart trouble and a general low state of the health, as in spring the system is more pliable and chronic diseases so securely lodged in the system that they are with difficulty ousted, become more tractable.

Thousands of men and women have found from personal experience that Paine's celery compound makes people well, and keeps all from sickness who take it in the spring.

Many a father and mother have noticed the unmistakable improvement in the health of their children from taking Paine's celery compound in the spring. It is the one scientifically accurate remedy fitted by its composition to thoroughly purify the blood and dispel that exhausted feeling and get rid of skin diseases, headaches, and fits of depression with which children with weak, nervous systems, as well as grown people, are afflicted.

Rheumatism

Is a blood disease and only a blood remedy can cure it. So many people make the mistake of taking remedies which at best are only tonics and cannot possibly reach their trouble. Mr. Asa Smith, Greencastle, Indiana, says: "For years I have suffered with Sciatic Rheumatism, which the best physicians were unable to relieve. I took many patent medicines but they did not seem to reach my trouble. I gradually grew worse until I was unable to take my food or handle myself in any way; I was absolutely helpless. Three bottles of S.S.S. relieved me so that I was soon able to move my right arm; before long I could walk across the room, and when I had finished one dozen bottles was cured completely and am as well as ever. I now weigh 170."

A Real Blood Remedy.

S.S.S. cures Scrofula, Cancer, Eczema, and any form of blood troubles. If you have a blood disease, take a blood medicine—S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) is exclusively for the blood and is recommended for nothing else. It forces out the poison matter permanently. We will send to anyone our valuable books. Smokehouse for Curing Meat.

A smokehouse so arranged that the attendant need not enter when filled with smoke to replenish the fire is but rarely in use. The plan illustrated obviates such annoyance. The house is square, and may be of a size dependent upon the amount of material one may have yearly to cure by smoke. For common use, a house ten feet square is of ample proportions. In the cut, an entrance door is shown in front and a small window near the top that can be opened from the outside to quickly free the inside of smoke. At the bottom of one side is a small door, from which extends a small track to the center of the room, in which slides a square piece of plank, moved by an iron rod with a hook on one end. On this plank is placed an old iron kettle, with four or five inches of earth in the bottom. On this the fire is to be built, when the kettle can be slid to the center of the room with the iron rod. It can be drawn to the small door at any time, to replenish the fire without entering the smoky room or allowing the smoke to come out. The house has an earthen floor and a tight foundation of brick or stone. The walls should be of matched boarding and the roof shingled. Corn cobs make an excellent smoldering fire with an abundant evolution of smoke. Chips from the woodpile with some earth and sawdust, if not too moist, also make a smoldering fire that answers very well.—Farm and Home.

Whipping Balky Horses.

Notwithstanding the fact that the press continually admonishes whom it may concern that it does no good to whip a balky horse, almost every owner or driver of one does it to-day. It is probably the greatest piece of horse folly in existence. It is not a remnant of barbarism, but it is continued barbarity, and brings out what original sin there is in a man. The brain of a horse can retain but one idea at a time. If the idea is to sulk, whipping only intensifies it. A change of that idea, then, is the only successful method of management. This may be accomplished in a score of ways, a few of which are here named: Tie a handkerchief about his eyes; tie his tail to the bellyband or backband; fasten a stick in his mouth; tie a cord tightly about his leg; clasp his nostrils and shut his wind off until he wants to go; unhitch him from the vehicle and then hitch him up again, or almost any way to get his mind on something else. Whipping or scolding always does harm. The treatment should always be gentle. There are more balky drivers than horses.—National Stockman.

Sales All the Year.

The farmer who grows a variety of crops can if he chooses select such kinds as will furnish him always something to sell at any time of the year. All the family expenses go on without ceasing, and unless income does also the debts accumulated when there is nothing that can be sold make a heavy load when the few main crops are marketed. The necessity for peddling his products in small driblets may seem a hardship, but it teaches how little sums of money acumulate if they are saved, which is a much better lesson than that of learning how fast they add up when they are carelessly spent.

Sow Plaster Early.

The experience of farmers who have used plaster most shows that it cannot be relied upon to do any good if sown after most of the spring rains have passed. How early it can be sown with advantage cannot be said. It was a common practice of an old farmer of our acquaintance to sow plaster on the snow at the same time he sowed his clover and grass seed. If there is a clover seeding on the ground, the plaster may be sown any time in winter or even the previous fall. It will help the clover until the field is plowed again. It is supposed that one advantage of the plaster is in absorbing ammonia from the air and rain. But there is more ammonia in most snow in proportion to the water it contains than in any rainfall. For that reason sowing plaster on snow that fell in large, open flakes, and therefore absorbed most ammonia from the air, will probably be advisable.—American Cultivator.

Wood Ashes for Heavy Soils.

All heavy soils contain some potash, but it is often in form not available for crops. Hence ashes or other forms of available potash may do as much good on heavy loams as they do on sandy soils naturally deficient in this mineral. Even if potash is present in sandy soils it is quite likely to be in the form of a silicate of potash, which is insoluble except in contact with something that is fermenting. It is thus that a dressing of stable manure having very little potash itself may make bright, clean straw where it is applied, while on the land not manured the grain and straw will be rusted. It is potash or the lack of it that makes this difference, and the result shows that the manure made soluble enough potash in the soil to maintain healthful plant growth.

Poor Tramps Make Good Roads.

It was determined to break up the tramp nursery this season by establishing some extensive rock-breaking piles at Waterville, central New York. A tent was erected in which the tramps were given shelter and food, and it was stipulated that each tramp was to earn his shelter and food by work on the rock pile. The hop-picking camp lasted twenty-two days, and during that time 716 men and 64 boys, all tramps, availed themselves of the opportunity to work on the rock pile. They succeeded in breaking up 400 tons of rock, worth to the community for their macadam roads $1.15 per ton. The cost of their entertainment amounted to but $375. The experiment was satisfactory in every respect. The conclusion was found that the hard times have influenced the character of tramps. Ordinarily the opportunity to work for a meal or a night's lodging is rejected.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Success in Fruit Gardening.

Published accounts are given of the success of small orchards planted a few years ago in northern Ohio. Among others is that of Aaron Teeple, who ten years ago bought three acres of land, built house and barn on it, and planted it with a general collection of fruit trees, including peaches, pears and plums, and twenty of the most popular grapes. One-half of the ground is devoted to market gardening. For three or four years he has taken premiums for fine fruit. It is said that the receipts this year will exceed $600. The plum crop was over fifty bushels this season, and the fruit large and highly colored. This furnishes a fine example of the brief time required to bring fruit trees into profitable bearing.

Profit in Young Animals.

It is mighty poor stock that will not pay a profit while it is young. The cost of keeping is smallest then, and its growth from the same feed is greatest. An old farmer who always grew hogs said that the market never got too low for him to make some profit. All he did as the price went down was to kill the pigs or sell them alive while still young. "It is curious," he used to say, "how many farmers toward spring want to buy young pigs. They will often pay nearly as much as the same animal will be worth after keeping all summer, especially if the price of pork declines, as it is apt to, between spring and fall.

Water Over Underdrains.

It often happens when ground is frozen deeply and thaws suddenly that water will stand over the drains for several hours. This only means that the frozen soil does not let the water through to the drain. But this never occurs long enough to do any injury even to winter grain. The warm air from the drain is always thawing the soil from below, and it does not take many hours if the drain is a deep one for the warm air to break through.

Coal to Boil Sap.

Under the old methods of tapping trees enough were killed by the severe gashes made to keep the fires supplied that are needed to boil the sap. But in most places coal is quite as cheap a fuel as wood, especially if thifty maple trees have to be cut down to feed the fires. A wood flame is sure to be uneven, not furnishing the steady regulated heat which is needed to make the best product.

Poultry Points.

Have you selected your best and sold the culls? If not, why not?

We should manage not to keep a fowl or chick any longer than they are a source of income.

To sell our best even at a good price is foolishness; as long as we wish to breed we should keep them.

The knowing just what to sell and just when to sell is often the difference between success and failure.

It is no earthly use feeding a lot of chicks that are of no use only for the pot; sell them and use the money to buy fed for the rest.

Of course our best breeders must not be disposed of even when they are not laying, as they must be kept for breeding purposes.

It is not good policy to sell all the cockerels, even if you do not want but one as a breeder; by keeping three or four you will have a better selection, and then if you keep but one, he might die, then you would be compelled to buy a breeder.—Interstate Poultryman.

His Views.

The Rev. R. S. Hawker, rector of Morwenstow in Cornwall, was the poet of his rocky and beautiful corner of England. It has been said of him that he was a poet first, a divine afterward. His great and stirring song: "And shall Trelawney die?" will never be forgotten in Cornwall, and all his lyrics of the region are touched by such true and haunting local color that they can never be disassociated from the place. But aside from his poetic gifts, this noted churchman had a fine sense of humor. Many persons doubted whether he was at one with his own church, or whether he had inner leanings toward the Papal communion. Querists, however, got little satisfaction out of him. One day some one asked him pointblank, "What are your views?"

He walked up to his window, and looked out on the Atlantic.

"If," said he, "my eyes were strong enough, I should have a perfect view of Labrador."

AN interesting series of episodes is represented by the inaugurals of the various Presidents of the United States, for the administering of the oath of office to the chief magistrate, from the father of his country down to the present incumbent, has been attended by many incidents that go to form part of our national history. The scenes from some of these bygone pageants are unique and impressive. They cover the triumphal progress of the first President to his installation that put the new nation on its feet, the Jeffersonian simplicity that won by its quiet and correct dignity, the Jacksonian tinge of "the wild and woolly west" that made Old Hickory famous, the attendance of guards armed with rifles to protect the new chief magistrate on one occasion, and grand and formal, plain and cheerful, quiet and uproarious inaugurations, according as circumstances and enthusiasm ruled the time.

The first Wednesday in March, 1789, was the 4th, and it has ever since been regarded as inauguration day. In the case of Washington, however, the installation became "a postponed event." The old continental congress failed to meet at a time assigned, and the result was that our first President was not officially notified of his election until April 14. People traveled slowly in those days, and it was not until the 23d, after a week through which he received all possible honors from the people, that Washington reached Elizabethtown Point, on the New Jersey shore, opposite New York City. Here he was met by a committee of Congress and a deputation of local officials. A barge had been prepared to carry Washington to the city and was waiting under the command of Commodore Nicholson. It was manned by thirteen sailors in white. The sailors pushed off, other barges fell in behind, and a striking procession made its way. The ships in the harbor were gaily decorated, and as the long procession moved through them with music and song it was saluted by cannon and cheers that shook the echoes. The preparations for the formal inaugural, however, were not yet complete and the proceedings were postponed for a week. The 30th opened a bright and cheering day. A national salute was fired and the city bells were rung. At 9 o'clock the people were summoned to the churches in thanksgiving, and to offer up prayers for the success of the Government.

At Federal Hall the troops were formed on both sides and Washington walked between the lines to the Senate chamber. He was dressed in a suit of broadcloth of American manufacture throughout. His white silk stockings were spun and wove in America, and his shoes were ornamented with plain silver buckles. His head was bare and his powdered hair was tied behind in a fashionable bag. Chancellor Livingston repeated the oath of office and Washington kissed the page. "It is done," said the Chancellor. Then waving his hand he shouted to the multitude: "Long live George Washington, President of the United States!"

When Washington for the second time took the oath of office there was less public demonstration than on the first occasion. The seat of government had by that time been removed to Philadelphia, and the inaugural was held in Congress Hall.

The inauguration of John Adams was notable chiefly for its dual character. It was less a welcome to the new executive than a farewell to the old.

The hall was filled, and it is related that there was scarcely a dry eye save only those of Washington. To Mr. Adams it seemed that Washington was triumphing over him. "His look seemed to me," wrote Mr. Adams to his wife, "to say: 'I am fairly out and you are fairly in.'" The general towered above all those about him, showing in his worn but calm features the touch of care that had been heavy upon him, and that he was the central figure of the event there can be no doubt.

The ungracious absence of the acting President marred the installation of Thomas Jefferson. Washington had already set the precedent that the outgoing President should attend his successor during the ceremony of taking the oath, when he did the honors at Adams' inauguration. But before dawn of March 4, 1801, Adams had left Washington. The day throughout the United States was celebrated like a new Fourth of July. In some places the defeated Federalists made hostile show of their chagrin, but the rejoicing seemed practically universal.

With Jefferson came an era of simplicity that took its character from him. He had objected to the pomp marking previous inaugurations. His own was totally free from this element. He had no establishment in Washington. He had no coach. So Jefferson rode to the Capitol on horseback unheralded and without escort, tied his horse to the palings of a convenient fence, and entering, took the oath. His dress was as plain as tailor could devise. The second inauguration was as devoid of display, but it was under more pleasant auspices. Jefferson had been elected by 162 votes against but 14 for his opponent, and the electoral college had no new failure to record.

James Madison seemed content to continue the era of simplicity. His dress at his inauguration was of homespun, a circumstance in itself sufficient to excite great enthusiasm. So vast was the concourse that it seemed the whole population had turned out. The escort of cavalry with difficulty pressed its way through the mass. Ladies fainted, and the gentlemen accompanying them had to fight to guard them against the jostling, trampling throng, all eager to press near the platform. In the outskirts of the crowd there were a number of encounters between rowdies. One Tory who had the temerity to shout his sentiments that "Jim Madison ought to be hanged" was set upon and nearly beaten to death, escaping finally with bruises and the loss of an eye.

Before the time came for the inauguration of Monroe the British had burned the Capitol. The inaugural took place in Congress Hall and the public ceremony occurred on a platform near the site upon which a new structure was being erected. The military feature was impressive. As Monroe took the oath a single gun announced the stage of proceedings and military salutes followed in quick succession from the navy yard and different organizations that had participated in the march.

When John Quincy Adams was inaugurated little remained of the Jeffersonian simplicity of a quarter of a century before. At about noon Mr. Adams left the door of his residence, with his predecessor, in a carriage. The escort was largely military, and the many handsome uniforms lent color to an imposing array. Mr. Adams, dressed in a plain suit of black, ascended to the Speaker's chair, the chief justice just in front. Then the new President read his address, occupying forty minutes in its delivery. Among the prominent people present was Gen. Andrew Jackson, and the apparent cordiality of the handclasp between the two was much commented upon.

There was turmoil in Washington the day that Andrew Jackson became President. The inauguration was not the comparatively quiet and orderly affair to which the public had grown accustomed. The vicinity of the Capitol was like a dark and troubled sea. When Jackson appeared thousands of heads were bared, and thousands of faces turning upward changed the aspect of the sea in an instant. But the clamor of the White House reception outdid that witnessed at the Capitol. Orange punch had been provided by the barrel. The adherents of Jackson crowded to the presidential residence. They shouted. They stood on damask chairs, leaving there the imprint of muddy boots. "Go it, Andy; we put you there," they yelled. "Give 'em fits, Andy." And the general smiled. All the men carried hickory sticks. Many of the women wore necklaces made of hickory nuts strung together. It was the wildest scene that ever had the White House for its setting, and those who viewed it carried the memory of it long.

March 4, 1837, the date of the Van Buren inauguration, was as perfect as could have been desired. Much of the good-will shown was for the retiring President Jackson, tall and erect as ever, but with hair silver white and deep marks of care upon his face. Old and worn he was, and, as with Van Buren by his side he passed along the line, cheers were for him. The two rode in Jackson's phaeton, a gift made of wood from the old frigate Constitution. Van Buren's address was an effort of oratory, and was listened to intently.

For days before the inauguration of William Henry Harrison the city had been filling with visitors, many of them from a distance. The military feature of the parade was the finest that had ever been seen at Washington. "Tippecanoe and Tyler, too!" was the cry of the day. Mr. Harrison rode a white horse. He was attended by seven citizen marshals, all handsomely mounted. There were unique figures in the parade. A log cabin on wheels, drawn by four horses, was the creation of some of the many Tippecanoe clubs. It was applauded from one end of the line to the other, for this was the triumphant close of the Log Cabin campaign.

Exactly one month after he had taken the oath of office as Vice-President John Tyler was called from Williamsburg to assume the duties of the presidency. William Henry Harrison lived but thirty days after having taken a place in the White House. When Tyler arrived an effort was made to induce him to take an oath as acting President, but this he refused to do. His refusal was constitutional, and was accepted later as a precedent in the cases of Fillmore, Johnson and Arthur.

There was the usual great concourse of people to attend the inauguration of Polk, so great being the rush that a bed was a luxury. All the arrangements were admirable, but the weather could hardly have been worse. While it permitted Polk and Tyler to ride in an open carriage, an umbrella was held over the former while he delivered his address to an ocean of other umbrellas. The pavements were so slippery that many of the soldiers fell ingloriously during the parade.

The inauguration of Zachary Taylor was not marked by unusual features. The procession was headed by twelve volunteer companies. A special guard that kept the crowd back from the carriage was composed of 100 young men mounted on spirited horses. A prominent feature of the parade was the number of "Rough and Ready" clubs, so named from the title the general had won at the head of his command. At the conclusion of the inaugural address bells rang, cannon were fired and the cheering was prolonged.

Millard Fillmore was the second to assume an executive chair made vacant by death. July 10, 1850, the day after Taylor had passed away, Mr. Fillmore, Vice-President, appeared at the capitol. Senate and House were in joint session. He went before the body, took the oath of office and left the building unattended.

The crowd attracted to the capital to witness the inauguration of Franklin Pierce had a strong western element in it. The day was raw and cold. The guard of the President was composed of mounted young men, and a fine display was made by the army and navy. Mr. Pierce delivered his address from memory, the manuscript in his hand not being looked at. Before he had finished snow was falling. As he took the oath of office, far away before the American consul in Cuba, Wm. R. King took the oath of Vice-President.

March 4, 1857, was foggy and cold in the early morning, but as the cannon announcing the approaching inauguration of Buchanan began to boom the fog rolled away. Once more Washington was crowded. The address was delivered at the eastern portico of the Capitol to an immense crowd, that as the towering form of Buchanan appeared cheered with much enthusiasm. The oath was administered by the venerable Chief Justice Taney and salutes were fired.

The inauguration of Abraham Lincoln, March 4, 1861, was the opening of an epoch, the turning of a page in history. For the first time a President-elect of the United States was forced to seek the Capitol with people about him to guard him from the violence of assassins, unheralded and by night so that murderous designs against him might be baffled. President Buchanan got into the same carriage with the President-elect, and the two were driven through the narrow lane left on Pennsylvania avenue between pressing lines of citizens. It was feared that an attempt would be made to assassinate him on his way to the Capitol, and in addition to the escort sharpshooters were posted on the buildings with orders to shoot anyone who should draw a weapon, but no untoward events occurred.

"GIVE 'EM FITS, ANDY!"

The second inauguration was under circumstances far different. The United States Government seemed no longer threatened with dissolution, but the end of the struggle was nearing. Lincoln was looked upon as the savior of the country. His address, as before, was one of courteous firmness. Chief Justice Chase administered the oath.

After the death of Lincoln, April 15, Andrew Johnson succeeded to the presidency. The oath was administered by Chief Justice Chase in the presence of the cabinet. President Johnson made a brief address, but there was in it no demonstration.

A striking feature of the first inauguration of Ulysses S. Grant as President was the number of veterans in the crowd. Grant and the retiring President rode in an open landau, Johnson looking sour and grim, Grant calm and content. Behind them stretched back a long array of political organizations bedecked in the uniforms they had worn during the campaign. There were Tanners, Invincibles, Wide Awakes and Grant and Colfax Clubs. Colored Republican clubs were also numerous. In the evening the city was illuminated. Fireworks were set off, and there was noise made of a hilarious sort. The ball was a heroic social affair. So cold was the ballrooms that ladies retained their wraps and gentlemen their coats. The ice cream froze solid, but nobody cared; warm drinks were in demand. Mrs. Grant shivered bravely in white silk, but the guests went early, and by midnight the hall was deserted.

The inauguration of R. B. Hayes was peculiar. Mr. Hayes took the oath of office twice. Saturday, March 3, Gov. and Mrs. Hayes were guests at the White House. They withdrew from the other guests, their purpose being unknown, and entered the Red Room with President Grant. There Gov. Hayes first took the oath. Once more the ceremony was performed, this time Chief Justice Waite publicly administering the oath in the presence of Senate, House and visitors. The inaugural address was delivered from the usual stand. In the evening a reception was given at the White House, a collation having been provided by Mrs. Grant.

The inauguration of James A. Garfield was marked by the enthusiasm and display that had become by this time a part of each recurring event. As he began the delivery of his address the sun broke through the clouds, and it seemed to all a happy omen. When he had finished, and applause was yet ringing in his ears, the President turned and kissed his mother, who had sat unspeakably proud of her son, and then kissed his wife.

Again death was the usher, and Chester A. Arthur was called to the presidency when his chief lay on the bier. He was in New York when notified of the necessity of qualifying, and at once took the oath as President. This was Sept. 20, 1881.

The inauguration of Cleveland in 1885 and of Harrison the second in 1889 are too recent to need more than a mention to recall them to the reader. It was done in a minute, the actual making and unmaking of Presidents. At these installations the usual formalities were rigorously observed and the usual throngs were present. Perhaps the inaugural ball which signalized Cleveland's second inauguration was as impressive an event as had characterized such a function for many years. It was preceded by a magnificent parade, and the ballroom contained 10,000 persons representing the flower of America's sons and daughters. The ceremonies had a certain military tinge from beginning to end that lent unusual brilliancy to the event.

A Wondrous Waterfall.

The Olympic mountains have produced another attraction, the beauty of which is not exceeded on the western slope. What is said to be a grand waterfall coming from the snow-capped peaks above the clouds over a bluff, falling a perpendicular distance of over 1,000 feet and disappearing in the bosom of a beautiful plain, has just been discovered near Lake Crescent, by two ranchmen. Their description of the scene would exceed anything of similar character in the Yellowstone Park.

From the snow on the crests of the Olympics, where white men have never visited, comes a little stream, which rapidly grows in volume until it reaches the edge of a perpendicular cliff overlooking a beautiful plateau of 300 acres a thousand feet below. For centuries the water has poured over the precipice until it has cut a smooth passage, something like a large pipe split in half, in the side of the mountain. Here and there it strikes an obstruction and out of the mountain's side spurt other falls. Standing alongside of the cliff a short distance away the scene is beautiful and looks as though there were half a dozen rivers bursting out of the mountain.

The huge volume of water disappears in a wild-looking cavern, and becomes an underground river. It flows beneath the plateau for a distance of two miles and then again bursts out of its imprisonment in the shape of an oval bridal veil, and dashes over the rocks and cataracts down to Lake Sutherland and out to sea.

The country is very rough, wild and hard to penetrate. There is an abundance of wild game isolated around the falls. The discoverers of the falls killed nine elk in half an hour and said there were 100 more in sight.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

A Burglar's Fate.

The other day a couple of little girls came to a physician's office to be vaccinated. One of them undertook to speak for the other, and explained: "Doctor, this is my sister. She is too young to know her left arm from her right, so mamma washed both of them."—Twinkles.

"And she didn't shrink from the notoriety?" "Shrink! Why, she used to fill only the smallest roles, and now she is one of the greatest actresses of her day." There was a tide in the affairs of women, as well as men, which, taken at its flood, led on to fame and $250 a performance.—Detroit Tribune.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR, ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, APRIL 30 1897

The telegraph editor, the world's atlas and the pronouncing dictionary are now inseparable companions.

Little Bulgaria may yet prove a thorn in the side of the Sultan. Her people have made demands which, if not complied with, may lead to that country's joining fortunes with the Greeks.

If the rulers of China and Japan will keep their eyes on Greece and Turkey they will see how to conduct a war. Greece is small, but the people know how to fight, and the Turks never know when they are whipped. In fact, a follower of Mohammed wins if killed in battle.

Had the late James G. Fair foreseen the legal contentions which have followed his death, and are but just begun, he might have relieved the courts of a burden and the public of the details of a tiresome litigation by leaving the bulk of his estate to the lawyers.

Professor Carl Plehn of the State University gave a lecture last Tuesday night before the San Francisco Farmers' Club on the present method of taxation in this State. "The failure to tax personal property throws an additional burden on real estate," he said. "All but 14 per cent of the taxes of California are paid by real estate owners. This fact shows that the farmer is overtaxed in proportion to his ability. His real estate is 90 per cent of all his property, and is taxed from 8 to 9 per cent more than the real property of the townsman." The remedy for this state of affairs, thought Professor Plehn, would be to tax every form of ability, instead of only property.

There is manifestly some dissatisfaction with that provision of the new Mining Act abolishing District Recorders and making it incumbent upon locators to record their locations in the office of the County Recorder. In the end, however, proprietors of mines will probably take kindly to the innovation. The district system had but few things to recommend it. True, it was some advantage to have the record in the immediate vicinity of the location. But to offset that one advantage the records in many instances were in the hands of very incompetent persons and very carelessly kept. And there was the danger always that they would be lost or destroyed. The new act will place them on exactly the same footing as to preservation as are other records relating to title in the Recorder's office; they will be properly indexed and the work of examining the title to any mining property will be greatly facilitated and simplified.

That wave of prosperity sweeps higher and higher. An army of 250 of the unemployed were shipped from San Francisco and landed in Stockton. Their leader says they can find nothing to do on the Pacific coast and are heading for the Missouri River. In the meantime he announces that they must be fed, and he relies on the towns through which they pass to furnish the wherewithal to appease the hunger of his followers.

Where are those millions of spindles that were to start on the announcement of McKinley's election, "furnishing employment to every idle man in the broad land?"

The day has come and gone, yet the good times are not. But let us have patience. The taxes will be higher at any rate. And in the meantime the cities through which the "army" passes will furnish flour and bacon to the destitute, while the Government at Washington perfects a tariff schedule which will place labor and production more firmly yet under the control of the favored few.

In the Chicago horse market, says the Breeders' Gazette, the top prices of the year ruled at the opening of the market the first week in April and have held strong, although arrivals were about as many as for the corresponding time last week. The export demand continues to absorb a large volume of the receipts, the Eastern markets are in better shape than for ten days past, and buyers are operating freely, and the express and ice companies are taking a good many smooth, heavy horses at good prices. Even the light drivers are picking up in price, probably in anticipation of the driving season. There is a lot of snap to the demand in general.

Chicago is the greatest horse market in the world and the greatest distributing point, as horses are shipped in all directions to all parts of the country, and also to Europe. Usually there would be from twenty to 100 buyers every day, and there are always buyers enough to take the stock offered. Some days the markets are a little stronger than others, but the range is usually within $5 per head.

In the Eastern horse markets the grade has been raised in the size of horses every year for four or five years, until the small horse is of but little account. Driving horses must be large, saddle horses must be large, work horses must be large, draft horses must be very large and very heavy, and all must be of high quality.

In shipping horses across the ocean to Europe the expense is very much greater and the risk much larger sometimes than others, but the cost would be in the neighborhood of $30 to $40 per head.

Chicago prices, April 3d, were as follows: Expressers and heavy drafters, $70 to $190; 1,150 to 1,400-lb. chunks, $55 to $90; 850 to 1,100-lb. chunks, $25 to $40; coachers and fast road horses, $90 to $275; ordinary drivers, $35 and upward. These prices are for good, sound horses five to eight years old, well broken and in good flesh.

DIED.

TIBBETTS.—At Big Pine, April 24, 1897, William R. Tibbetts, a native of Maine, aged 66 years.

On Sunday, May 2d, religious services will be held as follows: Lone Pine, in the morning, to commence at 11 o'clock; George's Creek, in the afternoon, to commence at 2:30 o'clock: Independence, in the evening, to commence at 7:30 o'clock. Subject of evening discourse "The Important Interview." All are cordially invited.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

Spring is coming on with long strides.

J. C. Crocker of Big Pine is a visitor in town.

Sheriff Given went to Bishop on Wednesday.

Mrs. Alice Morton was up from Keeler this week.

A. A. Neil was down from Blackrock yesterday.

The Independence Public School closes for the term to-day.

Most of the schools in the county will finish by the end of April.

The second installment of taxes became delinquent after last Monday.

Harry Cook is tasting some of the delights of city life in San Francisco.

Final examinations have been in order at the Independence School this week.

The locust trees are all in bloom, and the air is filled with their fragrance.

William J. Bryan will deliver the Fourth of July oration at Los Angeles.

S. G. Snelen Esq. came down from Bishop on Monday's train, on business in the Superior Court.

John Lewis Esq. left Wednesday morning for a trip to San Francisco by way of the Panamint country.

Jas. P. Little has come from San Francisco and is chief printer in the Independent office.

If you want to have a good time and help a good cause, go to the picnic at George's Creek to-morrow.

Mrs. Pauline Levy of Keeler, a member of the Rebekah Lodge, was present at their festivities Tuesday.

The Stuttz Theatre Company will show at Independence to-morrow evening. Seats now on sale at Rhine's.

Olive Lodge No. 222, Rebekah, will meet at Independence every second and fourth Wednesday of each month.

The body of Vesta Tibbetts, who died at Hawthorne Wednesday morning, was brought to Big Pine for interment.

Owing to the unusual fall of snow during the past winter, cattlemen will not drive to Long Valley till late in May.

Mr. and Mrs. John Fiehman came up from Keeler on Tuesday and attended the ball given by the Rebekah Lodge.

Miss Travers, the popular young school mistress of Camp Independence, returned to her home in San Francisco last Tuesday.

Dr. J. P. McQueen returned to Bishop from Hawthorne on Monday's train, having been called home unexpectedly by a telegram.

R. S. Miner Esq. left for San Francisco on yesterday's train, after two weeks spent at Independence on business in the Superior Court.

Two carloads of machinery came down to Bishop last Monday, to be used at the mill at Mammoth in the construction of a cyanide plant.

Jerry Mairs has been at work all the week repairing the Courthouse fence and fixing the creek so it will not wash where it runs through.

A special train, having on board Superintendent H. M. Yerington and Assistant Superintendent R. J. Laws, will go down over the C. & C. to Keeler to-morrow.

Attention is directed to the card of Messrs. Sneden & Vermilyea, of Bishop. The gentlemen will give prompt attention to all legal affairs entrusted to their care.

Carl Walter arrived home on Monday from Los Angeles, where he has been attending business college. He came by the Keeler and Mojave stage from the South.

Wells Barnes and Al Goodman arrived home on Wednesday from a trip to the Coso Mud Springs. Al. has improved very much in health since he came up here from San Francisco, a couple of months ago.

Philip Gehrig has leased the old Fernbach Brewery from J. C. Irwin. John Strohmeyer arrived from Keeler to-day with a load of freight for Mr. Gehrig. Gus Stecker is at work on repairs, and Phil will soon be turning out a first-class article, which will both cheer and inebriate.

At Ballarat.

A correspondent at Ballarat, the new mining camp at Panamint, sends the following items: Ballarat has a population of about one hundred, which is rapidly increasing. Four foundations for large concrete buildings are laid. Five frame buildings are completed, with more in course of construction. There are three feed yards, two saloons, two general merchandise stores, and more coming. Pleasant Canyon, in the same vicinity, has three saloons, one store and one feed-yard. San Francisco and Los Angeles capitalists are taking hold, and extensive developments will be made. Mayer, the well-known Los Angeles brewer, has invested largely in mining property, and is preparing to commence work on an extensive scale. The recent Indian scare is a complete hoax. The report that Panamint Tom had killed some prospectors had no foundation whatever. There are many valuable mines known to exist, and many more are certain to be discovered.

Trouble at the Peak.

John I. Blair, owner of the Silver Peak mines, last week attached the merchandise store, piles of wood and other personal property held by J. L. Hanchett. The United States Marshal served the papers. We are unable to learn the cause of the attachment. One theory is that Hanchett's lease on the mines has expired, and he refuses to give up possession until Blair pays him upwards of $200,000, the value he puts upon certain tailings accumulated during his lease. On the other hand, it is asserted that Hanchett's lease expired in August, and that he has paid no royalty since that time, although he has milled a large quantity of ore. The matter will be settled in the United States Court at Carson.—Walker Lake Bulletin.

The Rebekahs' Ball.

On Tuesday evening last occurred one of the social events of the year. The Olive Rebekah Lodge, No. 222, entertained their friends with a social dance at Mair's Hall. Some twenty-five couple participated in the enjoyment of the evening, and the whole southern end of the valley was well represented. Mrs. Webb, Mr. Matlock and Mr. Yandell contributed the music for the evening. The finest waltzes, polkas and quadrilles kept all moving smoothly and sometimes trotting wildly. Omie Mairs served the ball supper at midnight, after which the ball rolled on till morning. The ladies of the lodge are to be congratulated on the success of this, their first entertainment, and to the genial floor manager, Doctor Blair, is due a vote of thanks for his efforts to keep everybody jumping.

New Gasoline Engine.

Pat Keys and Tim Madden came in from Beveridge yesterday. Keys has purchased a six-horse power gasoline engine, and will construct two arastras at the mine to be run by it. This will save a great deal of expense in packing, and will enable him to work ore of a lower grade. He has about two hundred tons of ore on the dump which will work about $55 per ton, and is taking out ore steadily. Madden has about ten tons of high-grade ore on the dump.

The sad news was received from Hawthorne last Wednesday that Miss Vesta Tibbetts had died from the effects of blood poisoning of the throat. The young lady had been troubled with toothache, and some tooth drops had reached the throat and caused the fatal illness. Her death, following so closely upon the death of her father, makes it doubly sad. She was the picture of health, and that news will be a great shock to her many friends. The deep sympathy of the community is extended to the bereaved relatives.

The sad news was received here that W. E. Berger, formerly of Bishop, met an untimely end at Sonora last Sunday. He had been ill for several months, and during a spell of delirium he took his own life. He is a brother of Mrs. John Bourland and Miss Hattie Berger of Bishop, where his aged mother is also residing. Such sorrow as theirs time alone can heal.

Mrs. Margaret Reddy, formerly of Darwin, died last Sunday in Los Angeles, after a lingering illness. The lady was one of the pioneers in the county, and will be well remembered as a woman of noble qualities by many of the old timers. Her children, Katie and Mike, were both with her, and to them our sincerest sympathy is tendered.

At Hawthorne on the 21st of April Miss Rita Church, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Church, all well known in this community, gave a birthday party in honor of her ninth birthday. Fifty-two young folks were present, and games, dancing and good things to eat filled up an afternoon that the little folks will long remember.

Fred Edgington, M. Brockman and Charles Levy started for the Coso Springs yesterday. They had a tent and a complete camp outfit, and will remain some time. Mr. Edgington is a brother of Harvey Edgington of Francis, and arrived at Independence from Chicago last week.

The Stuttz Theatre Company will show at Independence on Saturday evening, May 1st. They were billed to show here Tuesday evening, but were delayed en route. There are twenty people in the company, and they will give a good entertainment.

W. R. Tibbetts died at his home at Big Pine last Saturday morning. His death was very sudden and unexpected; he retired as usual Friday night, and was found dead in his bed next morning. The deceased was a native of Maine, aged 66 years, and was a pioneer of Inyo county.

I. H. Mulholland and wife returned to town last Monday after a stay of two months in San Francisco, where Mr. Mulholland fully recovered his health.

PROTECTING HIGHWAYS.

An amendment to the Political Code which applies directly to the protection of public highways will prove good reading to those interested in the good roads movement. The amendment referred to is as follows:

Sec. 1. Section 2737 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

2737. Whoever obstructs or injures any highway, or diverts any watercourse thereon, or drains water from his land upon any highway, to the injury thereof, by means of ditches or dams, is liable to a penalty of $10 for each day such obstruction or injury remains, and must be punished as provided in section 588 of the Penal Code. Any person, persons or corporation who shall be storing or distributing water for any purpose, and shall permit the water to overflow or saturate, by seepage, any highway, to the injury thereof, shall, upon notification of the Road Commissioner of the district where such overflow or seepage occurs, repair the damages occasioned by such overflow or seepage; and should such repairs not be made within a reasonable time by such person, persons or corporation, said Road Commissioner shall make such repairs, and recover the expense thereof from such person, persons or corporation in an action at law. All persons excavating irrigation, mining or draining ditches across public highways shall be required to bridge said ditches and such crossings, and upon neglect to do so, the Road Commissioner for that road district shall construct the same and recover the cost of constructing said bridge or bridges of such persons by action, as provided in this section; provided, that the Supervisors of any county may construct and maintain bridges over any and all ditches used exclusively for irrigation purposes, and which cross public highways in the county over which they have authority, and may, with the consent of the owners of such ditches, declare any and all such bridges to be public property, and maintain and keep the same in repair at the expense of such county. And whoever willfully injures any public bridge is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and is also liable for actual damages for such injury, to be recovered by the county in a civil action; provided further, that every person who knowingly allows the carcass of any dead animal (which animal belonged to him at the time of its death) to be put or to remain within 100 feet of any street, alley, public highway or road in common use, and every person who puts the carcass of any dead animal within 100 feet of any street, alley, highway or road in common use, or who shall deposit on any highway any refuse or waste tin, sheet-iron or broken glass, is guilty of a misdemeanor.

Sec. 2. This act shall take effect immediately.

Another law intended for the protection of highways, and authorizing Boards of Supervisors to take necessary action to enforce the same, is as follows:

Sec. 1. Whenever it appears to the Board of Supervisors that any public road, in any road district of the county, is in danger of being damaged by storm waters, or floods, it is hereby made the duty of the Boards of Supervisors to adopt such measures as may be necessary to prevent such damage, or to repair the same; and the Board of Supervisors is hereby authorized to construct flumes, ditches or canals for the purpose of carrying off such storm waters, or floods, to a place of safety, and may condemn the right of way for such flumes, ditches or canals for such purpose; provided, however, that no more than the sum of $1,000 shall be used for such purpose in any one road district of the county in any one year.

Sec. 2. All moneys used for the purposes of this act may be taken from the general road fund of the county.

Sec. 3. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Americans are the most inventive people on earth. To them have been issued nearly 600,000 patents, or more than one-third of all the patents issued in the world. No discovery in modern years has been of greater benefit to mankind than Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, or has done more to relieve pain and suffering. J. W. Vaughn of Oakton, Ky., says: "I have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy in my family for several years, and find it to be the best medicine I ever tried for cramps in the stomach and bowels. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Two years ago R. J. Warren, a druggist at Pleasant Brook, N. Y., bought a small supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sums up the result as follows: "At that time the goods were unknown in this section; to-day Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a household word." It is the same in hundreds of communities. Where ever the good qualities of Chamberlains's Cough Remedy become known the people will have nothing else. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

On Saturday, May 1st, a Mayday picnic will be given at George's Creek, near the schoolhouse. Ice cream and other refreshments will be served on the grounds; the proceeds to go to the support of the pastor. A picnic at George's Creek is always an enjoyable affair, and the cause is a worthy one. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Dade Harkins' Wedding

By VIOLA ROSEBORO.

[Copyright, 1895, by American Press Association.]

Half a dozen people were sitting on the wide veranda (gallery, they called it) of the summer hotel at Overtonia. Overtonia was a new coal mining town built on the foundation of an old mountain village.

When the white front gate clicked and the thin bent figure of the coal company's president came slowly up the walk, everybody on the gallery shifted position a little as an unconscious expression of deference, and as the dignitary drew nearer the two young men of the party rose to their feet, but though the apparent difficulty of his movement might have seemed to sanction such a courtesy they did not offer him an arm up the steps. They well knew that the colonel would not appreciate such attention. The colonel's clean shaven dark face wore an odd characteristic expression, because his brows were knit, and his lips and keen blue eyes were faintly and quizzically smiling. When he reached the top of the steps, he lifted his broad soft hat to the ladies and took a look at everybody. "I've got some news for you," he said.

"Aw, paw!"

"Colonel, you're a godsend."

"Tell us, quick."

The replies to this beneficent statement tumbled over each other.

"You're all invited to a party," said the colonel, seating himself slowly in the shock bottom chair a negro girl placed for him in front of the rest of the party. The excitement of the ladies, young and old, rose to dramatic heights, and even the young men could not prevent their countenances brightening. A pretty, crinkly headed, brown hued girl, all ribbons and bangles, fell upon the colonel bodily.

"Aw, paw," she cried again, "tell us, is it over at the Alpine House?"

"More likely it's down at the college," said another lady.

"Tell us, colonel," said one of the young men, with an effort at insouciance.

"Charley," said the colonel to his daughter, who, despite her failure to be a boy, had been named for himself, "get away from my lame shoulder. Sit down, and I'll tell you all about it. I reckon none of you'd guess in a month."

The suspense intensified and in several minds became shadowed with doubt as to whether anything so inconceivable could be desirable.

"Art Harkins has a girl who is going to get married Wednesday night. He's going to give her a big wedding and invites everybody in the house to"—

The colonel got no further. A shrill vocal storm broke over his head, and he tilted his chair back against a wooden pillar and waited for it to subside.

All his audience were sufficiently interested and informed in the affairs of the mine to know that just now an invitation from Art Harkins resembled in one way a similar attention from royalty. It had the force of a command. Art Harkins was a mountaineer who could not read nor write, but who, by astuteness, energy, and, as was generally believed, cunning unscrupulousness, had actually contrived to get rich, rich not merely for a mountaineer, but rich even in the opinion of the impressive, imaginative and influential bankrupts who formed the majority of the mining company. Harkins was a member of the company and a large stock owner, and all the women in the hotel knew that for weeks their various masculine relatives had been hanging in midair in some incomprehensible but terribly real business uncertainty, from which only Art Harkins could deliver them. And now this homespun diplomat invited them to a wedding party! The group on the gallery grew so vocal that feminine re-enforcements hurried out of the house to see what was the matter. Under the circumstances, after a little bewildered wavering, it was soon agreed that nothing could be more amusing, more fun, more novel and generally delightful than to go to Dade Harkins' wedding.

"And then," said Mrs. Peytee, "no one but ourselves, no one that matters, I mean, need know anything about it. 'Tisn't as if we were over at the Alpine House and had to explain things some way to half the gulf states."

Mrs. Peytee was a round little brunette widow who was often called "very taking." She was a cousin of Charley Overman's, through Charley's mother's side of the house, and in a very easy going way, which was all the way they knew, she was chaperoning the girl. Socially she shone the more for her connection with the Overmans.

The colonel was considered an important man throughout the state, and, moreover, he was counted charming, "a fine conversationist and a good speaker." In her heart of hearts Mrs. Peytee had come to the conclusion that it was most desirable that he should marry a good wife, have somebody better than a giddy slip of a girl to take care of him and let somebody get the good of the distinguished position awaiting his wife. Mrs. Peytee had faith in the future of the mines, and she liked the colonel.

Several ladies among the summer colonists at Overtonia divined the existence of these views in Mrs. Peytee's mind—by the power of kindred sympathies perhaps—although she had never confided in them. Charley, however, was unsuspicious. Just now she was devoting all the thought she gave the subjects of love and marriage to their more important aspects as connected with herself. She was in love with one of the young men on the gallery, and he was in love with her.

His name was Harry Williams, and he was the son of another member of the mining company. It was a desirable and suitable thing that these two should marry, and as nobody had the least objection or threw the slightest obstacle in the way of their courtship, but, on the contrary, as every one about did what they could, in the modest southern way, to further it, of course their progress toward an understanding was slow. Upon themselves devolved the whole task of making the path of true love properly difficult.

Charley had firm ideas as to the degree of assertive, persistent devotion, displayed regardless of discouragements, that became a man and a suitor, and that permitted a girl to surrender gracefully, and Harry had fixed sentiments as to the bad taste and blindness and impertinence of a man who put himself in the position of a rejected suitor. It will be seen at once that these young people were both very young, and that the girl, as is the case so often, had a more romantic, literary and traditional education in love affairs than her lover. The insincerity of youth clung about their notions, and yet it was because they were so young that they were somewhat governed by them instead of following the dictates of their hearts, like the wiser Mrs. Peytee.

Nevertheless, thanks to nature's contempt for the theorizing of her children, they had made some progress in their knowledge each of the other's state of mind.

Everybody knows that weddings are contagious. When Harry that afternoon on the gallery listened to the discussion of the coming festivity at old Harkins', he had what he took—perhaps I had better say mistook—for a small but happy inspiration. He made up his mind at once that on that night he would declare himself to Charley. He would take her to the wedding in the only buggy that was to be had in Overtonia. Harkins' place was two miles from the hotel on a rough road. It was strange if coming home that night he could not find a felicitous moment for—what he was going to say and what he was going to do—for decisive steps, let us say. An evening buggy ride exactly suited his ideas of a proper occasion for serious lovemaking. He had regretted more than once that life on the mountain offered so few such opportunities, but the roads were so bad that in the public mind only some definite necessary end justified recourse to travel on wheels. In the fullness of his heart Harry embellished his little plan with various decorative features. Among other things, he thought that he would send off at once to Nashville for an engagement ring, so as to surprise Charley with the promptness of its appearance. No really grownup person, with brains enough to learn from experience, would ever have dared to tempt fate by such crass confidence as this, and a more penetratingly tactful youth would have known that Charley, even if she accepted him, would not be altogether pleased by this particular form of foresight.

But Harry was, in fact, but a boy and one sure to be generally astray as to what men have been pleased to christen the mysteries of woman's heart, though I dare say, if women had been managing the world's affairs and literature for the last several thousand years, we should be hearing just as much about the unfathomable mysteries of man's heart, the fact simply being that the mystery lies in those arrangements of an ever inscrutable Providence, by which it is established that the sexes shall be eternally divided, however appearances may sometimes contradict the fact, by an impassable gulf of mutual misunderstanding.

When Harry was seized with these dreams, he was so moved by them that he turned away from the agitated group, laughing and chattering about the Harkins family, and went and stood peering through the honeysuckle vine at the other end of the gallery. Charley called to him, and he did not hear her:

"Mr. Harry," cried one of the other girls, "Charley wants to know what you are going to wear."

"Excuse me," said Harry, coming toward them, but then he forgot to make any reply, in the distraction of seeing Charley's brown eyes turned up to his, and unable to endure just then the glancing frivolity of the talk he picked up his hat and strolled down the walk.

Charley felt distinctly miserable that she had been snubbed, so she laughed with merry abandon at the information that Art Harkins never, under any circumstances, took off his hat and would undoubtedly eat Dade's wedding supper with it on, and then she danced away into the big empty hall, dragged herself slowly up the stairs and crept off into an unfrequented garret. In the crowded house, this, since she fell in love and needed one, had become her place of meditation. She was overwrought by the unaccustomed and startling amount of sensation her days now brought her, and by dramatically picturing various unpleasant possibilities to herself as probabilities, though not in the least really believing in them, she managed to relieve herself by a few tears, and then she crept over to the one small square low window that lit the place. She sat on the floor and pressed her face against the glass and gave herself up to further dreaming, but now of vague, sweet possibilities, probabilities, surely, surely!

There were no other windows in the house that looked down into the corner of the green yard she saw. It was sheltered by a big trellised grapevine, and beneath its shade was an old garden bench.

When Harry found a chance to drag Mrs. Peytee to this spot for a confidential interview, it was under the delusion that it was invisible to all indoors. He and Mrs. Peytee were always very good friends, and now, seized with a sudden need of a sympathetic ear, it was to her that he turned. That idea about the ring that had slipped through his head became fixed now by nothing more or less personal to himself or Charley than the chance he saw of making it an easy pretext for telling his tale to Mrs. Peytee.

"Come, sit around by the grapevine with me," he said when, turning back to the house in his restless tramping, he met her in the yard.

Mrs. Peytee was always gracious, and she took his arm with a flattering air of possession and interest, and dragging her fresh trailing muslins after her she sought with him the seclusion of the rustic bench beneath the shadow of the grapevine.

The cultivation of flowers for export and for the manufacture of perfume is a very important industry along the coast of the Mediterranean. It is officially estimated that the value of flowers annually exported from Nice, Cannes, Beaulieu and Mentone is $6000.

REFORMING BAD BOYS.

French Government Does This by a New System of Isolation.

An effort along new lines is to be made by the French Government in the direction of remodeling vicious tendencies in boys. The scene of the experiment is the Institute Le Peletier at Montesson, in the department of the Seine. Youngsters who have already become criminals will not be treated, the design being to restrain and tone down criminal inclinations in boys whose parents have found them to be unmanageable. Two hundred cells at the institute have been set apart for the purpose. Youngsters received for treatment are examined as to their talents for acquiring knowledge or learning some sort of trade and are instructed in those branches for which they show a leaning. To curb the youngsters' inclination to cruelty they are allowed to have pets and each one is given a patch of garden to cultivate. They may keep birds, cats and rabbits. Each boy is subjected to a special course of treatment, his individual weaknesses and inclinations being taken into careful consideration. Only one boy is admitted into a cell, and under no circumstances are the inmates allowed to converse unless in the presence of an official of the institute. They have plenty of outdoor exercise, but neither in the grounds nor in the gymnasium nor in the schoolroom or chapel have they occasion to talk to their comrades. They are known by numbers only, and though not subjected to cruelty in any form the discipline governing their management is most severe.

The discipline even goes further. It directs that boys must wear masks whenever they leave their cells, either to go to the gymnasium, the playgrounds or to school.

The schoolroom, which at the same time serves as the chapel, is fitted with a row of cells or boxes forming a semicircle. The boxes, or stalls, are open at the top, so as to permit the free circulation of air, and their doors are abbreviated below and above, so the inmate can see the teacher on the platform opposite. The teacher can watch the boys thoroughly, but the latter cannot see their neighbors nor make any signs to them.

MOHSIN KHAN.

Recently Appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs for Persia.

Mohsin Khan, the newly appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs for the empire of Persia, is an able statesman, who was highly valued by the late Shah Nasr-eddin. The new Shah, Muzaffer-eddin, decided to continue the favor to Mohsin Khan which had been shown by his father to the diplomat, and the latter's elevation to the Shah's cabinet—if the royal advisers can be so called—is a reward for long-continued service. Mohsin Khan received a good European education, and speaks English and French fluently. For many years he was trained in diplomacy at the ministry of foreign affairs in Teheran and at various Persian embassies abroad. He was ambassador to Constantinople under Nasr-eddin, and during the sixteen years he occupied that post he successfully maintained the most cordial relations between the two great Oriental empires. Three years ago the Shah called him back to Teheran to assume the post of minister of justice, which he filled with much ability until more recently he was made minister of foreign affairs. Mohsin Khan is a Persian with all the polish of the Oriental. He is shrewd, observing, and perfectly competent to fill a post involving great capacity for diplomacy. Three Old Maids.

Miss Nancy Oliver died near Stillmore, Ga., last Friday at the ripe old age of 98 and a few months. She was one of a family of three old maids, who lived down on Jack's Creek, near the Ohoopee river, for over half a century in a small log house of but one room. They lived by carding, spinning and weaving by hand for people living near them. Aunt Nancy is the second one to die. Her sister Sallie died a few years ago at the age of 98. Only one member of the family is living now, Aunt Milbry, who is the oldest of the three sisters.—Atlanta Constitution.

INCIPIENT INSANITY.

A Sick and Ailing Girl—Her Mother's Advice.

An Interesting Story Told Under Embarrassing Circumstances.

From the Express, Los Angeles, California.

The interviewer's lines sometimes fall in queer places. People who are to be talked to may be in all sorts of conditions and frames of mind, but one cannot conceive a much more embarrassing thing for all parties concerned than an assignment to interview a mother of a two-days'-old infant. Some things are too sacred for even the callous newspaper man to lightly ignore. But Mrs. C. C. Reeder had a story to tell and this paper wanted that story. The baby was asleep, and the mother expressed her amiability, so the reporter was ushered into the room.

Mrs. Reeder used to be Johanna Rinker, and lived for several years at Riverside, Cal. She was a domestic and worked very hard. Perhaps it was the toil, perhaps the climate, at all events she fell sick. Doctors and medicines did her no good. Her appetite vanished. Sleep eluded her at night, always and ever that dreadful feeling of lassitude and depression, so familiar to women, made itself apparent to her. And then she began to imagine things. One night, while driving across a bridge that she knew perfectly well was there, she cried out in fright because she could see nothing. The doctors might call this insanity, but until the hallucinations and delusions grow to be a menace to life or peace, not much heed is paid to the imaginings of weakly girls.

Last spring Mrs. Reeder, for she had married in the meantime, concluded to visit her old home at Daleville, Ind., and it was while there that her mother, Mrs. Caroline Leaser, told her of the wonderful properties of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Mrs. Reeder began to take them. When she started in she could not walk the three-quarters of a mile to the post-office, she was so weak. In about three weeks she took, according to directions, about five boxes of the pills, and at the expiration of that time could go down into town and come back and do a big day's washing over the tub at home. Her blood came back into the pale cheeks, sleep once again refreshed her at night, the cold sweats left, and she could eat and enjoy all the pleasures and diversions of life where before she had been averse to society and amusements of all kinds. The awful notions and hallucinations left her, her brain again resumed its normal functions. From that time to now she has taken no medicine and she is well in all respects.

"See my baby. God bless its heart," said the proud mother. "It is as strong and healthy as any baby ever born. It weighed nine pounds." As it lay there, its little pink fists clenched over its thumbs, its little eyes puckered up in sleep, a bundle of pink, satiny infantile loveliness, there could be little doubt of the physical health of its parents.

Mrs. Reeder lives at a cottage numbered 407½ East Pico street, Los Angeles, Cal., and the last words she said were: "Oh, you are perfectly excusable. I am just as glad to endorse Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as you can possibly be to hear my story. If all suffering women only knew their power and good, there would be less sickness and misery in the world, I'm sure. Good-bye."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

HIS IS THE TIME of year .. .. when men .. and women .. become weakened by .. the weather, and run down generally. .. .. The first parts that the weather affects are the kidneys. The urea is not thrown off, but is forced back upon the lungs, and disease results—caused by weakness of the kidneys.

HERE IS ONLY ONE SURE WAY known to medical men for promptly checking troubles of the kidneys and restoring these great organs to health and strength, and that is by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. It has stood the test of time; it has saved thousands of lives; it has restored millions of sufferers to health; it has done what was never done, never attempted before; it has made men stronger and healthier; it has made .. women brighter and happier; .. it stands alone in all these qualities. Do you not think it would be wise for you to use it and thus avoid the dangers of the season? Insist upon having it.

WISE AS AN OWL.

The owl is said to be the wisest of birds because he keeps both eyes and ears wide open, says nothing and keeps up a good deal of thinking. When sciatica takes hold of a man, he is wisest who says nothing but keeps his eyes and ears open for the best remedy, who thinks and knows it may result in crippling, and who finds by trial that St. Jacobs Oil is the best known remedy for its treatment and permanent cure. It penetrates to the seat of the excruciating pain, soothes and cures it, and prevents what sometimes happens—the use of the surgeons knife to get rid of the torment. The owl thinks and then acts quickly, and the sciatica sufferer should act promptly to arrest the progress of the disease and to restore the nerve by the use of St. Jacobs Oil to its natural condition.

Morley and Dogs.

John Morley is fond of dogs, especially of a diminutive fox terrier which is frequently seen at his heels on the Thames embankment or in Battersea park. This recalls the fact that when in the heat of a political canvass an opponent denounced Mr. Morley as a dog the orator and statesman replied, "I have known dogs who for fidelity, friendship, affection and devotion would contrast most favorably with some human beings."

Exchanging Compliments.

Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters tones the stomach and digestive organs; cures dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, and all ills produced by a disordered stomach.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

TO A SOUTHERN GIRL.

Her eyes
Would match the Southern skies
When Southern skies were bluest
Her heart
Will always take its part
Where Southern hearts are truest;
Bright pearls
The gems of Southern girls,
Her winning smile discloses;
Her cheeks
When admiration speaks,
Were only Southern roses.
Her voice
By nature and by choice,
E'en those who know her slightest
Will find
As soft as Southern wind
When Southern winds are lightest.
Her laugh
As light as wine or chaff,
Breaks clear at witty sallies,
As brooks
Run bubbling through the nooks
Of all her Southern valleys.
Such youth,
With all its charms, forsooth—
Alas, too well I know it!—
Will claim
A song of love and fame
Sung by some Southern poet;
But she
In future years maybe
These verses will discover,
Some time
May read this little rhyme
Sung by a Northern lover.
—Buffalo Commercial.

BY MUTUAL CONSENT.

She was seated on the grass, with her shoulders propped up against a camp-stool; there were two or three garden benches standing about, but she said she preferred to sit on the grass—it made her feel more "country."

To intensify this feeling she had clothed her fresh young beauty in a marvelous organdy, so sheer that her arms gleamed through it like alabaster, and had pinned on her bright head a great hat drooping with roses. By her side leaned a white parasol edged with lace.

Her companion, a young man in tennis flannels, who was stretched at her feet, had commented sarcastically upon her "rustic attire," and a hot discussion had ensued, a discussion happily interrupted by the arrival of a servant with a tray of iced lemonade.

"Ah," said Miss Gresham, helping herself to one of the frosted glasses, "if there is one person for whom I entertain an undying affection it is Betty! I know we are indebted to her for this. She is one of those rare people who always do the correct thing."

"Betty," repeated Markland, lazily, sipping his lemonade, "and who is Betty?"

"He has forgotten Betty!" cried the girl, "and has no more shame than to confess it! Betty, who was always his sworn champion and who has helped him out of I do not know how many scrapes. This is the effect, I suppose, of college travel and society."

"Betty!" again repeated Markland. "Ah!" a sudden light springing to his eyes—"your old nurse, of course. Why, certainly I remember her—dear companion of my youth! But I did not recognize her by so common a title. To me she always seemed a beneficent genius, a good angel, rather than an ordinary mortal." He lifted his glass—"To Betty," he said; "may her shadow never grow less."

"Betty was asking me about you the other day," said the girl; "she wanted to know if you still rode and boated and swam like you used to do. I told her you had given up dancing because of the exertion." She looked at him innocently.

"Did she ask you anything about your own life?" said Markland, sitting up—"a resume of how you put in your time during the winter season in town might be interesting to her, and certainly profitable."

"Anything I do is interesting to her," she responded, coldly.

"Do you know," he said, "I have been marveling over you ever since I came. I cannot quite realize that you have been ten days in the country without being bored. How have you accomplished it? I thought that the day of miracles was past."

"My good Tony," remarked Miss Gresham, patronizingly, "you must not judge other people by yourself; it is a very foolish and narrow-minded way of doing. Because you cannot exist happily without your clubs and theaters is no reason why I can't."

"I never knew you belonged to a club," observed Markland, mildly. "Have you developed into that wonder, a new woman?"

"Oh, nonsense! You know I was speaking figuratively! I mean that I am not wedded to any particular state of things—that I can adapt myself to circumstances and enjoy whatever comes."

"Can you? How delightful! But, jesting aside, has it not been rather slow for you here, without any girls for you to see through and scorn and be amused by—nor men to analyze and draw you out and get interested in?"

"How do you know there have been no men?"

"I have your own word for it. I heard you refuse four of your best friends permission to visit you down here, and I inferred that the common herd had been no better treated."

"Yes," she said, "you are right. My solitude has been uninvaded. I have been resting and enjoying myself thoroughly. By the way"—suddenly—"who told you that you could come?"

"No one, but I had to run down to my place on business, and I thought it would look unneighborly not to drop in and find out how you were getting on."

"Very thoughtful, indeed! So you have remembered your old home at last! How long has it been since you were here?"

"Five years"—pondering—"five years this June."

"Is it much changed?"

"A good deal; the old willow by the pond is down; fell in the August storm. Baston tells me."

"Oh, am so sorry! We used to——" she paused, blushing.

"Yes," he responded, "so we did." And he glanced at her laughingly.

"And the house?" she hurried on "how does it look?"

"Awfully—everything gone to pieces dust, cobwebs and mold everywhere the family portraits white with mildew."

"Oh, Tony," she cried, "how dreadful! You really ought to do something about them."

"I shall," he said. "I was fond of the place as a lad, and the trip down here has awakened all the old feeling. I am tired to death of society, the exertion of dancing"—smiling—"and the bother of being agreeable to people that one doesn't care a rap about; so I have half made up my mind to marry and settle down in the country; that is," —slowly—"if I can persuade the girl I love to consent to bury herself for my sake."

Miss Gresham looked down; her face had lost a little of its bright color, but the pallor was in no way unbecoming.

"I thought the best thing to do was to come and talk over the matter with you," he said, after a somewhat awkward pause; "you always help a fellow so with your advice."

"I imagine," she replied, "that if a woman cared for a man she would go with him anywhere."

"Exactly, but that is the question—does she care for me? You see"—gazing at her steadily—" she is a society girl, used to a good deal of gayety and movement and excitement, and it does not seem quite fair to ask her to come down here, does it? It looks conceited and selfish, as if one thought a good deal of oneself, don't you know!"

She looked at him gravely.

"Do I know her?" she asked. "Is she some one you have known a long time?"

"Oh, yes, since I was quite a boy."

"Is she pretty?"

"Of course, you ought to know that."

"And clever?"

"I suppose"—slowly—"she never says unkind things or sees through other people as—as—some of your other friends do."

"Unkind things? No. But as to seeing through people"—breaking into a laugh—"I am obliged to admit that she does. You see, she has been out a lot, and the rosy bondage is a bit out of place; natural enough, don't you think?"

"I suppose so"—doubtfully—"one cannot go through life with one's eyes shut; that is, if anyone has any brains, and yet, somehow or other, I don't quite like the description. You are such a good fellow, Tony, for all your affectation, that you ought to marry somebody very much above the average."

"And so I shall."

"You always said," she went on, "that I might choose a wife for you. Don't you remember just before you went to college that last ride we took?"

"Assuredly."

"How we agreed to atsk each other's advice about the people we should marry, and how we promised that neither of us would get engaged without the other's consent?"

"Of course I remember. I am quite willing to abide by the old contract. I shall never marry without your permission."

"Oh, Tony, really?"

"Really."

She gazed at him with parted lips and shining eyes.

"You are very trusting—how do you know that I shall not take a base advantage of your implicit confidence and refuse my consent altogether? You don't know how lonesome it will be going out next winter without you. I have got so used to having you around that I don't believe I'll enjoy myself in the least unless you are there."

She pondered a moment.

"Come," she said. "I will compromise. I won't forbid the banns altogether, but you must not think of marrying until I am tired of society and ready to take the fatal step myself. How will that suit you?"

"Perfectly, if you don't put it off too long."

"Oh, well, that I don't know. I have about decided to be a spinster."

"Come, now, that isn't fair. Suppose we agreed to be married the same day? That meets with your approval? Well, to keep that promise fresh in your memory"—reaching over and taking her hand—"wear this for my sake."

He drew her glove off very gently and sliped a loop of diamonds on her finger.

The blood flashed to her cheeks.

"Tony," she cried, the full meaning of his action breaking over her, "Tony, I don't understand. I——"

"Oh, yes, you do," he answered, drawing a reassuring arm about her, "but for fear you might make a mistake and go off and marry another fellow, I will make my meaning clearer. I love you—I have always loved you. I have never dreamed of asking anyone else to marry me. I would have told you so before, but you are such a dreadful little flirt that I was afraid to test my fate. What say you, sweetheart? Shall we marry and settle down at the old place?"

"And it was I all the time," she murmured, "and I thought you meant——"

"Who?" asked Markland, curiously.

"Oh, never mind"—hastily—"I see now what an absurd idea it was. So you always loved me, ever since I was a child? Well, really, Tony, it was only fair, for I never cared for anyone as I cared for you. Come, let us go in and tell Betty."—New Orleans Times.

Moody at a Climax—The Individual Is Judged by the Fruits of His Living—The Real Comfort of Prayer—Short Sermons.

Shot and Shell from D. L. Moody.

WE WANT to know what we believe, and be ready at all times to defend it.

I don't know of any better work than the leading of others to a better life.

I don't believe a man is fit for God's service if he is in doubt about his own salvation.

Let us get the church of God out of the Doubting Castle and then something will be done.

God's greatest sermons were preached to one or two. The greatest was preached to one man.

I'd rather trifle with the lightning or the deadly pestilence than with my chance of eternal life.

If this audience would do what they could, what a revolution there would be inside of twenty-four hours.

Christ's preaching produced inquiries. I wouldn't give a snap for preaching that doesn't produce inquiries.

What we want to do is to get down to personal work. What may be good spiritual advice for one may be very poor advice for another.

If the minister doesn't touch a man's conscience what good is he for, what is he preaching for? His business is to thunder unrighteousness.

It is a great calamity that any man or woman should attend church for ten or twenty years and then be unable to tell some one the way of life.

How few there are willing to go down the lanes and alleys and talk to one person or one family and bring them to Jesus Christ. That is the kind of work we have got to do.

If you find a man or a woman who is troubled about their sin, don't tell them your own experience, or they will look for an experience of the same kind. Take them straight to the Word of God.

People ask: "'What become of the converts; do they stick?' Well, I advertised in New York last week for all the converts of 1877, when I spoke in that city last, and I felt that I was blest from on high when 1,900 persons came forward and registered. Nineteen hundred. Think of that."

Judge with Care.

It is extremely difficult to disassociate the individual and the act. We may as well be frank and say that it is an impossible task. An act becomes the interpreter of the heart's purpose where the intention is not to deceive. Straightforward purpose within presents itself outwardly in clean, broad, generous living. It must always evidence itself in deeds of tenderness, philanthropy and holy sacrifice. Pure living in the breast, in its outward flow, pours upon the world the sweet blessing of pure living. The individual is correctly judged by the fruits of his living. All criticism becomes harsh, dishonorable and un-Christian which forgets the outward act in its rush to climb back into the chamber of the soul, where purposes are born. There alone should be heard the footsteps of the Divine.

Prayer.

Prayer does not directly take away trial or its pain, any more than a sense of duty directly takes away the danger of infection; but it preserves the strength of the whole spiritual fiber, so that the trial does not pass into temptation to sin. A sorrow comes upon you. Omit prayer, and you fall out of God's testing into the devil's temptation; you get angry, hard of heart, restless. But meet the dreadful hour with prayer, cast your care upon God, claim Him as your Father, though He seem cruel, and the degrading, paralyzing, embittering effects of pain and sorrow pass away, a stream of sanctifying and softening thought pours into the soul, and that which might have wrought your fall but works in you the peaceable fruits of righteousness. The answer to prayer is slow; the force of prayer is cumulative. Not till life is over is the full answer given, the whole strength it has brought understood.—Stopford Brooke.

If Jesus Be Not Christ.

I do not know what joy in service there can be to those who do not believe that one transcendent and divine man has appeared on earth to bind the hearts of those who aspire to live worthily and nobly to Himself. I do not know what joy there can be to any who reduce the grandeur of His claims, the validity of His powers, to the level of ordinary humanity and walk henceforth without devotion to any historically real and unique Savior, who contemplate the gains and losses, the joys and sorrows, the victories and wrecks, the noble deeds and crimes of this life, and see in them all only the inevitable outcome of the inviolable and inexorable law of conflict and survival. I know not to what, in hours of temptation and tempest, he shall cling who finds behind the intricacies of human life only an unknowable force, or believes that the all is the manifestation of God.—President Carter, of Williams College.

Work and Steadfastness.

"Be ye steadfast and unmoved, always abounding in the work of the Lord." This oft-repeated and beautiful exhortation of St. Paul has a divine philosophy that is not generally understood. Maclaren says: "The root of all steadfastness is in consecration to God." It is almost impossible for a busy Christian to fall. Give an earnest-hearted, devoted Christian any true work that will make him active, enthusiastic and happy, and you fortify his religious life so that the most tempting conditions of life will have little effect upon him. He will be steadfast and unmovable; but put that same Christian into a situation where his activities are not called into exercise, and he will be vulnerable at almost every point.

The Spirit of Christian Service.

"What matters the spirit in which work be done, if only it be done?" so say some now and then. But watch them a little while in their relations with others. When they are become employers or superintendents, instead of underworkers, they feel and speak differently. The spirit makes a great difference, especially in certain sorts of service. It is peculiarly a vital element of Christian service. God cares much more for the spirit than for the form of work done for him, and in a large measure the work itself is given us to be done in order to afford opportunity for the cultivation of a right spirit.

Champion Sunday-School Pupil.

Here is a new kind of record. John C. Eastland, whose picture is reproduced here, is the champion Sunday-school scholar of the world. He lives at Danville, Ky., and is 13 years old. He began attending the Sunday-school at the Methodist church south in Danville in May, 1887, when a little more than 3 years old, and in the nine years and nine months ending Feb. 1 he had missed only two Sundays. Or, in other words, he was present on 509 Sundays out of a possible 511. The Sundays he was absent were early in his career, and he has now been in his class for 356 consecutive Sundays. It is doubtful even if this last record of John C.'s has ever been equaled. On one of the two days that he missed he was very sick with measles and he was likewise unavoidably detained the other time.

J. C. EASTLAND.

Called Upon Again.

No doubt most true Christians have much sweet peace and many bright and happy days in this world, but their peace is like that of the mariner who has battled with the tempests of the night, but when the morning comes the sky is bright and the sea unruffled, and with light and happy heart he voyages onward to the desired haven, or like the soldier who has made the march and fought the battle and gained the victory, and, though enjoying the soldier's rest and with it the sweets of triumph, knows not how soon the bugle may sound and he again be called to struggle with the foe.

Care for Our Souls.

See how men throw overboard the lading of the ship when it becomes a question of saving their lives. Reason teaches them that the less precious must go first. They do not throw over first their gold and then their corn, neither do they lose their lives to save their ingots. So let us, above all things, care for our souls and their eternal interests.

Bits of Things.

The sense of God's nearness charms away a thousand fears.

Honesty may be the best policy, but policy is not always honesty.

As you go forward in life never expect too much, never hope for too little.—Dr. Jowett.

"Forbearance has ceased to be a virtue," you say. What if God should so conclude concerning you?

Those who are kind, sympathetic, considerate and thoughtful of the pleasure and interest of others never lack friends.

Souls are made sweet not by taking the acid fluids out, but by putting something in—a great love, a new Spirit, the Spirit of Christ.—Henry Drummond.

A religion without thanksgiving, praise and joy, is like a flower without tint, perfume or honey. There may be such a flower, but surely no one would care to pluck it.

Many parents are anxious about their children's spiritual welfare. Let them plead this promise. "I will pour out my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessings upon thine offspring."

A physician cannot be very successful unless he is enthusiastic about his profession * * * and I tell you a Christian will never amount to much unless there is enthusiasm in his Christianity.—H. M. Wharton, D. D.

However far apart two people may be, if they will move toward a common center, they will find that as they come nearer to the center, they will be nearer to each other. So the nearer we come to Christ, the nearer we will be to each other.

You can serve God on the farm, or in the bank, or pleading before the bar, or practising medicine, as truly as in the ministry, if the Lord truly calls you to one of these positions. But be sure he calls you in that direction. Do not make the mistake of taking ship for Tarshish if the Lord sends you to Nineveh.

By grace I am the little that I am, and by grace alone would I do the little that I hope to do. The doctrine of grace, in all its aspects and relations, is more and more precious here; and what will it be hereafter, when we shall be permitted to join in that son of Moses and the Lamb to him who has redeemed us, and washed our robes and made them white in his own blood!—Mary Lyon.

Raising Turkeys.

Some years ago, says a correspondent of Farm and Fireside, I took a great fancy to raising turkeys. Undoubtedly the turkey is a most interesting bird, a most interesting study, and under favorable conditions can be made a profitable crop. I had unlimited range, and groves of chestnut and beech trees close by, so that the birds could obtain a good share of their living from the woods, however at the risk of some losses by the attacks of foxes, skunks, hawks and owls. The turkey is a natural-born tramp, and when hunting for food or for a good nesting-place will wander off a mile or more as easily as a hundred rods. He is hardly the bird for any one to keep who has only a small place in a somewhat crowded vicinity. Under such conditions one has to confine his flock by means of surrounding their run with a high fence at high cost, or of adjusting a so-called turkey-shingle to each bird so as to hamper their movements, and keep them confined by an ordinary fence; for if the birds are left at large, there is apt to be trouble before long with the neighbors.

RUN FOR YOUNG TURKEYS.

Handy Hog Holder.

The simple, inexpensive article for holding hogs, illustrated herewith, recommends itself to any one who has many hogs to ring. It will save time and labor enough in ringing twenty hogs to pay for itself the first time. The hogs should be confined in a close pen so that the one who handles the holder can walk up behind them and reach over and slip the larger stirrup-shaped end over the snout and into the mouth. The hog will back up and the operator standing in front can very easily hold any hog perfectly still. It is easily adjusted, easily taken out, and when in use gives a leverage upon the upper jaw which secures perfect control of the animal in ringing.—Farm and Home.

RINGING THE HOG MADE EASY.

Advice About Strawberries.

Strawberries do well on almost any well drained soil, which is free from frost, reasonably fertile, and not infested with white grubs. There is little danger of making the soil too rich, but there is a possibility of injuring the plants with commercial fertilizers. The best fertilizers are well-rotted manure, bone meal and wood ashes.

The best method of preparing the soil is to plow in the fall, mulch with manure, and fit the ground in the spring with cultivator and harrow. The best time to set strawberry plants is in early spring. For matted rows the plants should be set eighteen inches by four feet apart, and for hills, one foot by three. In hill culture the runners are all removed, and for the best results in matted rows a part should be cut off, or some of the plants dug out.

Generally, it is better to keep a bed only one season, but if kept longer the best treatment is burning soon after fruiting. Winter protection should be given by mulching, and the best material is swamp hay.—Ohio Experiment Station Report.

Per Cent. of Moisture in Soil.

It is estimated that an acre of soil to the depth of one foot will weigh about 1,800 tons, and that if it contains 25 per cent. of moisture the proportion will be 450 tons of water per acre. An acre of land eight inches deep (which is deeper than the average of plowing) weighs 1,200 tons, and would thus hold 300 tons of water. As low as 5 per cent. of water will sustain plants, but they thrive best when the moisture is about 12 to 25 per cent.

Hedges.

Hedges are useful or detrimental according to the way they are kept. A well-trimmed hedge is ornamental and becomes better every year, but if neglected, and allowed to grow without attention, it is very unsightly. The first year is the most important in managing a hedge, and in three years it should be in a condition to demand but little trimming. An osage orange hedge is better than a fence when once established, and can be so managed the first three years as to become impenetrable to small animals.

Sweet vs. Field Corn.

It is a prevailing idea that sweet corn has more virtue than field corn. There is no difference except that the former is less hardy and more difficult to grow. The sweet corn has its nutriment in the form of sugar or saccharine matter, while in the field corn it is in the form of starch, which is changed into sugar in the stomach of animals.

The human stomach likes its carbonaceous foods in their most complete form, so, as a rule, we prefer sweet corn to field corn, and sweet potatoes to the tuber now worth ten cents per bushel; but there is no evidence to show that these are any better foods, though they are obtained at greater cost. But the animal kingdom is better prepared to transform the starchy foods into fat than is the human stomach. The same line of reasoning that leads to a preference of sweet corn for fodder would compel the raising of sweet corn for swine feeding.—Connecticut Farmer.

Action of Roots in the Soil.

The action of roots in the soil is not fully known, but that they can alter the substances presented and change the insoluble matter into plant food is admitted. Silica enters into the composition of plants—in many of them largely—yet it is a substance that is not readily made soluble. The glassy appearance of the blades of corn, the edges of which are sharp enough to cut the hand, is due to silica, and it may be termed vegetable glass. Silica really provides the bony structure of plants, and the roots have the power to appropriate it in unlimited quantity, especially if the soil abounds in potash. It also exists abundantly in the soil, and is not included in the list of fertilizers that are usually applied as plant food.

Black Currants.

Many are the virtues of black currant jam and jelly. It was used by our grandmothers as gruel; it was given the children to eat when they had sore throats. A pitcherful of black currant tea, made by pouring boiling water over two or three tablespoonfuls of the jam sweetened or not, according to taste, was always kept on hand in fever cases, and made a delightfully cool and thirst-allaying drink. The jam was made by using three-quarters of a pound of fruit, and boiling over a slow fire till a little poured on a plate would set.—American Agriculturist.

Cultivating Wheat.

Raising wheat by the Campbell method—that is, by drilling, and cultivation—saves a bushel or more per acre in seed, as one peck plants the acre, and five pecks or more are used when sown broadcast. A farmer of Austin County, says an exchange, planted an acre in the Brazos bottom drilled, and old wheat growers who saw it when well headed out said it was the finest they had ever seen, and that it would make sixty bushels of grain. It was never harvested except as green feed, for there were no mills there to grind it.

Plant Them Early.

Carrots, beets and parsnips should be planted early, so as to allow the crops a full season in which to grow. They will also escape the late weeds. The practice of planting such crops after corn is put in is to double the labor of fighting weeds, which becomes laborious with crops grown from small seeds. The land must be plowed and made loose as soon as possible, so as to give the first weeds a chance to grow, when the cultivator and harrow should work the land fine. It is useless to attempt to grow such crops unless the seed bed is made exceedingly fine.

To Exercise the Poultry.

On almost every farm there is a shed that is fairly dry all through the winter. In this shed throw dry leaves or cut straw to the depth of ten or twelve inches. Nail a board at the front of the shed so as to keep the leaves or straw from being scratched out, and in this litter scatter the whole grain you intend to feed your chickens. They will scratch for it the whole day long, and in this way secure exercise while getting their feed.

Utilizing Unproductive Land.

There are on almost all farms some bits of land naturally as good as the rest that remain unproductive for lack of capital. It may not be more profitable to bring these into productiveness than it is to put the bulk of the manure and labor on the best land, but it makes the farm look better and sell better. Quite often when these places are too stony for cropping trees planted there will prove the best use such places can be made to serve.

One million standard gold dollars weigh 1 9-10 short tons, while the standard silver dollars weighs 29 3-7 short tons per $1,000,000. One million dollars of the silver 10c piece weigh 29 5-7 short tons; of the 5c nickel, 110 1-5 short tons; of the 1c bronze piece, 342 6-7 short tons, and of the "old" copper cent 1,885 5-7 short tons.

ABLE KANSAS ORATOR.

Congressman Calderhead Whose Currency Speech Created a Stir.

Congressman William A. Calderhead, whose speech before the committee on currency and banking concerning the bill to establish an international bank created such a stir at Washington, is reported the ablest orator on the Kansas delegation. He was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Fifth or Marysville district. Mr. Calderhead went to Kansas in 1868. He is a native of Ohio and was educated by his father, a minister of the United Presbyterian Church. When he first came to Kansas Mr. Calderhead settled on a farm, where he labored four years. After that he removed to Newton, taught school, read law, and was admitted to practice in 1875. He spent four years at Atchison teaching school, and in 1879 he settled in Marysville and opened a general law practice in that city. Before his election to Congress

Mr. Calderhead was elected to a number of minor offices. He was for several years clerk of the Marysville Board of Education. He is 53 years old. At the outbreak of the rebellion he shouldered a musket and fought till the end of the war.

A Barbarous Custom.

Though the "fashion" of tattooing among boys and young men has fortunately gone out to a great extent, there are still some who consider it fine and manly to have themselves decorated with figures and emblems. How completely barbarous this practice is may be learned from the writings of travelers. The most savage races have been most given to tattooing, and the practice seems curiously associated with cannibalism.

The Fijians were tattooers in their barbarous period, but were surpassed in this "art" by the New Zealanders, who also undoubtedly practiced cannibalism. Elaborate tattooing was among them a mark of honor.

Among the Maoris, or New Zealanders, there were two classes who were exempt from this "embellishment." One of these consisted of the slaves, and the others were the women of the ordinary class. Both slaves and women were despised, and not deemed worthy of the honor of tattooing. Only women of high rank were permitted to have a scroll embroidered, as it were, on each side of the chin.

The sort of savagery that went with this custom may be inferred from a startling fact in the early history of the colony of New Zealand. The chiefs learned that elaborately tattooed heads brought a price from collectors for the British Museum and other European museums of anthropology. Never until then had Maori slaves been tattooed; but now the chiefs had slaves decorated with their own lordly designs, in order that they might cut off their heads and sell them to the European collectors!

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR, ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 7 1897

The little coterie of gold men, the people who deify Grover Cleveland, and who have fatuitously reasoned that the country would accept the defeat of Bryan last November as a rebuke to the reform democracy, and that time and public sentiment would enable them to re-construct the party with the late administration policy as a basis for action, have been rudely awakened from the delusive dream.

Cleveland's address at the Reform Club banquet, instead of finding favor in the eyes of the Democracy of the nation, has done a world of good in solidifying the party and has brought forth such an expression of public sentiment as shows how futile is the effort of the gold Democrats to again assume control and direct the destiny of the party Democracy.

Aside from any question of policy involved, Democrats will not soon forget that the men who now seek to regain the lost power did in the hour of the party's need, give their silent support to McKinley, and openly rejoiced at his triumph. Mr. Bryan, in an open letter on Cleveland's address, voices the sentiment of the masses in the party when he says:

"His thinly disguised support of the Republican ticket in the late campaign did much to drive silver Republicans out of the Republican party, and their loyalty to bimetalism has not been shaken by defeat. In his address Saturday night he aided the silver cause still further by removing whatever danger might have been of concessions from the regular Democrats to bolt us. If he had discussed the fundamental principles of Democracy and then urged a union of forces upon a platform comprising the differences of the money question, he might have done us harm in some sections, but his dogmatic insistence upon a foreign financial policy, in his emphatic endorsement of the organization of gold Democrats will have a wholesome effect in convincing timid Democrats of the folly of any attempt to reunite Democrats who believe in bimetallism with Democrats who are wedded to gold monometallism.

Mr. Cleveland recognizes that the contest over money, instead of being ended, is only just beginning; He recognizes it as an irrepressible conflict, and in this he reasons rightly. The Democratic party will in 1900 reiterate its demands for the free and unlimited coinage at 16 to 1, and it will be opposed by those who at that time believe in a gold standard. This being as certain as any future event can be, why should those affiliate now who expect to engage in combat so soon hereafter? We now have a harmonious Democratic party, and we have a bolting organization which claims to represent another kind of Democracy. Let them both exist and time will determine which is fittest to survive. If any bimetallist is converted to the gold standard, he can join their organization; if any gold Democrat repents he can return to the fold." Californian.

Claus Spreckles is opposed to the Hawaiian treaty and is ready to give reasons for the faith that is in him. He shows that the beet factories now in operation in this State and those in course of construction can more than supply the demands of this coast, and that we do not need the island sugar and as we do not need it we are simply giving the big planters out there the benefit of subsidy. In his interview he said: "Let me call attention to a phase of the situation that is entirely lost sight of. We are taking from Hawaii its entire crop of sugar, which will this year be about 235,000 ton, for which we will pay in round figures $15,000,000. Of this product not to exceed 70,000 tons are turned out by Americans, while the money for the remaining 165,000 tons is paid to German and English planters and manufacturers, and out of the 70,000 tons credited to Americans 45,000 tons are produced from the plantations in which I am interested." Let it be added that most of the "Americans" he mentions are of the carpet-bag order who are trying to run a government of their own, and are not citizens of this country, and hence are not entitled to our fostering care—certainly not to the extent of taxing our people millions to give to them.

The French Government has notified the Porte that it proposes to extend the protection of its flag to Greek Catholics in Turkey. That has the right ring. It would have sounded better still had France said to all the Christian nations, We protest against the order of expulsion of non-cambatants and regardless of religious faith will instruct our representatives in Turkey to extend to them the protection of our flag and ask all European nations to do likewise. There is precedent for such action. Even if there were no cases of record, the justice, humanity and Christianity of the thing would warrant it.

The President has directed Major General Miles to go to Europe and watch the war between the Greeks and the Turks from the front. He will be duly accredited, and will be entitled to be received with due consideration. The value of this inspection by the chief of our military forces can scarcely be overestimated. He will have opportunities to observe the use of modern arms in actual war, the effects of heavy and light artillery, the mistakes and wisdom of management, movement and care of troops, etc. His report on his return will constitute a valuable volume.

If the Senators do not hurry up a little bit with that tariff bill the country will soon have its attention distracted to base ball and forget all about it.

Those Dear Cows.

From first to last, Arnold must have published between 20 and 30 volumes, and as we are told that writing did not come easily to him it is clear that Mr. Morley's description of him as one of the most occupied men of his time is not exaggerated. His correspondence therefore was confined almost wholly to his own family, and is naturally filled with such personal matters as they would be most concerned to know. The fireside concerns of his daily existence—his children, his pets, his health, his garden, the places he visited, the dinners he ate, and the people in whose company he ate them.

The bulk of these letters were written to his mother, and news of his children naturally plays a large part in them. "They go everywhere with me that I will take them, and their talk is delightful. We passed a yard the other day where there were cows, and N. said: 'What a nice smell from those dear cows, papa! Isn't it kind of the dear cows to give us smells?'" One can imagine with what pleasure the grandmother would read such instances of the little one's quickness and sympathy. One can imagine with what pleasure the father would write them. But alien eyes, bent possibly upon their own children and their own cows, may be pardoned for reading unmoved such essentially familiar and domestic records. There is a saying: "Never tell your troubles. You only take up the time of the man who is waiting to tell you his." In this hard and busy world the saying perhaps holds good of other things than troubles. — Macmillan's Magazine.

New York as a Literary Mart.

Edward W. Bok, in The Ladies' Home Journal, writes of "The American Literary Center," and presents the claims of New York and Boston (between which cities it may be inferred he believes it rests) for the distinction. He summarizes New York in this way: "New York undoubtedly offers the largest market for literature of any city in America. This is naturally so, as must always follow in the case of the largest and wealthiest city of any country. The Empire City controls the largest number of publishing houses, even though it cannot claim all the principal ones. It has a larger number of magazines and periodicals of all kinds than any other city, even though it is deprived the right to the first and foremost of all American literary periodicals, the leading eclectic magazine of the world or of the most widely circulated channels of serial literature. But, unquestionably, it has the majority, and a powerful majority it is. It has libraries galore, one might almost say, yet the two principal libraries of the country are in other cities. Its list of authors, resident of the city or near it, is long and representative, embracing some of the most gifted pens which make contemporaneous American literature. If all our best writings do not emanate from its immense places of output, a goodly portion undeniably do."

Poor Louisa's Sore Throat.

A teacher in a national school who had been much annoyed by truancy, says London Answers, has recently been stringent in enforcing the rule that her scholars, on their return to school after an absence, must bring her a note stating in full the cause of such absence, the note to be in the writing of a parent or guardian. The following is a note brought by one of her pupils after two weeks' absence:

"Louisa was absent monday, please excuse her.

"Louisa was absent toosday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent wensday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent thursday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent friday, she had a sore throte.

"Read this over again for the next week."

Beauties of "the Code" Illustrated.

Two young Russian officers attached to the Orsk infantry regiment recently quarreled over three cups in a cafe chantant at Orenburg, and one of them struck the other across the cheek with his open hand. The subalterns were intimate comrades, and the aggressor made an ample and satisfactory apology when he came to his senses. This was cordially accepted by his friend, but the regimental court of honor decreed that the officers should fight, and a duel was arranged with pistols at 20 paces. The young lieutenant who had received the affront and forgiven his friend was hit in the thigh and crippled, and consequently is unfitted for further service.—London News.

Something For Nothing.

"It is astonishing," said an observant woman not long ago, "how much some people will give if they think they are getting something for nothing. Now I teach my children constantly that anything of value can never be had for nothing. There is such a thing as luck, and there are bargains, but in the end you will find that such luck never comes to those who are always on the lookout for it, and that bargains are obtained only by those who know what to buy, where to buy and how to buy."

Perseverance is surely the keystone of luck,
And fortune will favor the one who has pluck.

—Brooklyn Eagle.

Applying the Proverb.

The Louisville Courier-Journal tells of an extremely religious man who lives on Lost creek in Greenup county. He is a close student of his Bible, and doesn't propose to live on Lost creek in the next world if he can help it. A few nights ago he was searching the Scriptures and ran across the admonition of Solomon, "Spare the rod and spoil the child." After studying the matter over he concluded that the rod had not been applied often enough to his own family of seven hopefuls, and he yanked the entire seven out of bed and administered a sound whipping to every one of them.

Pitt's Sarcasm.

In 1805 Pitt called a meeting of the British militia colonels to consider his additional force bill. Some objected to the clause which called them out under all circumstances and argued that this should not be "except in case of actual invasion." "Then," said Pitt, "it would be too late." Presently they came to another clause, when the same objectors insisted on the militia not being liable to be sent out of the kingdom. "Except, I suppose," said Pitt, with cruel sarcasm, "in case of actual invasion."

DIED.

DUKE—At the residence of James Hines, Aberdeen, Cal., May 6, 1897, Matthew Duke, a native of Ireland, aged 67 years.

The deceased was a Federal soldier during the Rebellion and was a Grand Army man. For years past he was in a very feeble condition and required constant care. The funeral will take place at Big Pine to-morrow.

On Sunday, May 9, religious services will be held as follows: Aberdeen, 11 a. m., Liberty, 3 p. m., at Independence at 7:30.

All are cordially invited to these services.

The Reverend G. W. Van Deventer D. D. Supt of the Nevada mission will hold the last quarterly conference of this conference year at Independence on Monday, May 17th.

Dr. Van Deventer will preach at Lone Pine Saturday, May 15, services to commence at 7:30 o'clock and on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. The sacrament of the Lord,s Supper will be administered at the close of the sermon.

Dr. Van Deventer will preach in the afternoon at Georges Creek at 2:30, and in the evening at Independence at 7:30 o'clock. At the close of this service the sacrament of the Lord's supper will be administered.

The quarterly conference will be held id the church on Monday afternoon. In the evening Dr. Van Deventer will preach, service to commence at 7:30. Collection at each service. All are cordially invited.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor

P. W. Forbes and family are visiting Bishop.

To be, or not to be, that's the question with Durrant.

Richard Roland of Lone Pine visited town this week.

Assessor Chalfant has gone to Southern Inyo on official business.

Ernest Laird went to Bishop yesterday to do some short hand reporting.

Mrs. G. Sanger returned home yesterday from a visit to the Bakersfield country.

Bar No 33 valued at about $1,600, was shipped from the Reward mine this week.

Harry Cook arrived home from a visit to San Francisco on yesterday's stage from the South.

Mr. J. A. McKenzie and wife, Ben Lasky and Dr. Middleton spent Monday in Indebendence.

The air is laden with the perfume of locust blooms and every tree looks like a huge white bouquet.

W. P. Yaney come down from Bishop Wednesday and left here yesterday for the Panamint country.

Fred Bulpit was a passenger on yesterday's stage. He had been to Los Angeles taking in the fiesta.

General Miles is going to Europe to see the fight. Greece is crying "Enough!" and Turkey is champion.

Don't miss "Uncle Tom's Cabin" tonight and the hoe-down immediately following. Get your seats early.

A frequent query this week: "Mama, the band's all got their clothes on, and can I please go hear 'em play?"

Jake Shoemaker and Charley Collins came down from Big Pine yesterday and are spending a couple of days in town.

Arlie Mairs and Jack Welsh came in from Ubaheba on Wednesday, work being temporarily suspended on the copper mines there.

L. F. J. Wrinkle is surveying for Langford and others some 18 or 20 mining locations for patents at Pleasant canyon, southern Inyo.

P. H. Mack Esq., left for San Francisco yesterday where he represents Inyo Lodge, No. 301, I. O. O. F., at the meeting of the Grand Lodge.

It is reported that the Silver Peak gold mines have been sold to an English syndicate who proposes to develop these properties on a large scale.

Superintendent H. M. Yerington, Assistant Superintendent R. J. Laws, R. K. Colcord and Evan Williams made a trip over the C. & C. to Keeler Saturday, returning north Sunday.

May day Pic-nic.

May day was celebrated in various parts of the county by the time honored picnic festivities. The children all donned their summer attire but neglected to consult the weather clerk, and returned home in the evening sadder, wiser and colder than they started out. The picnic at Georges Creek was well attended, and the proceeds of the ice-cream stand was turned over to the pastor, T. H. Nicholas. The Stuttz Dramatic Company arrived at Georges Creek about noon, en route for Independence. They regaled the merry-makers with music by the band, recitations, etc.

New Mining Law.

The new mining act of California was signed by the Governor on March 27th and will go into effect May 26. Lode locators should take notice that $50 worth of work must be done within sixty days after posting the preliminary notice. This applies, of course, only to those claims located after the act goes into effect. The impression seems to prevail that this amount of work will be counted in and be given credit for as part of the annual assessment work required by the Federal statutes, but in very few cases will this be so. Section 2324 of the United States statutes was amended January 22, 1880, by adding the following words:

Provided, That the period within which the work required to be done annually on all unpatented mineral claims shall commence on the first day of January succeeding the date of location of such claim; and this section shall apply to all claims located since the tenth day of May, 1872.

In the case of lode claims the amount of labor that would have to be performed up to within a year from the first of January succeeding the date of location would be therefore in California $150 worth.

The new State law requires that $10 worth of work must be done on each twenty acres of placer ground located within sixty days after location. Besides this, under the United States statutes, the required annual assessment work must be done.

In cases where claims are located near the end of the calendar year it will be possible to do the required $50 worth of work after January 1st of the year following and within sixty days after location, and so make it part of the required assessment work specified by the United States statutes.

Death of Vesta Tibbetts

After an illness of less than two weeks Miss Vesta Tibbetts passed away last Wednesday morning. The immediate cause of death was blood poisoning, which resulted from the use of medicine applied to an aching tooth. The unfortunate young lady accidentally swallowed some of the medicine, and her throat became sore and swollen to such an extent that she could not swallow food for several days, and blood poisoning resulted. Her many friends were untiring in their attentions, and everything possible was done to relieve her suffering, but all to no avail. Miss Tibbetts was a universal favorite in our little town, and her untimely death has cast a gloom over the community. Words of commiseration are heard on all sides. Deceased was to have been married next month to George Woodruff, and the young man who was indefatigable during her illnes, has the sincere sympathy of many friends.

Miss Tibbetts' remains were taken to Bishop on Wednesday's train for interment, accompanied by her sister May, Mrs. J. H Miller and George Woodruff. The funeral took place at Bishop on Thursday, and was attended by sorrowing friends from all parts of Inyo County. Deceased was a native of Big Pine, aged 19 years, four months and six days.

Hawthorne Bulletin.

Memorial Day.

With the approval of the Secretary of War, the following is published to the army for the information an guidance of all concerned:

On Memorial Day, May 30, at all army posts and stations the National flag will be displayed at half mast from sunrise till mid-day, and immediately before noon the band or field music will play a dirge, "Departed Days," or some appropriate air. At the conclusion of this memorial tribute, at noon the flag will be hoisted to the top of the staff and will remain there until sunset. When hoisted to the top of the staff the flag will be saluted by playing one or more of the National airs. In this way fitting testimonials of respect for the heroic dead and honor to their patriotic devotion will be appropriately rendered.

There has been a question raised as to whether the flag should be displayed at half-mast on Memorial Day or hoisted to the masthead. The above order of General Miles ought to be satisfactory. Memorial exercises should be held in the morning when the flag is at half mast, particularly in the mountains, as the afternoons are generally very windy.

The Randsburg Miner says: Parties returning from the Panamint country are well pleased with their trip. They report a large amount of development work being done on claims in that region. The new mining town of Ballarat has been laid out on the Western slope of Telescope range with plenty of water easily obtainable, and already quite a camp has been formed.

Hundreds of thousands have been induced to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy by reading what it has done for others, and having tested its merits for themselves are to-day its warmest friends. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

STUTTZ' BIG THEATRE COMPANY.

Like a ray of sunshine, from a murky cloud, or a spring of fresh, cool water in our desert, came the Stuttz Theatrical and Concert Company to our midst. Our people were hardly prepared for this unusual occurance, a company of twenty actors and musicians carrying a full set of scenery and a selection of rich and beautiful costumes, for a complete production of all their plays, which includes "A Celebrated Case," "East Lynne," "Bitter Atonement," "Little Nell," "Regina," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," etc. Yet, when it became known that this was so, a rush was immediately made for tickets, and the demand did not abate during the entire engagement in this city of one week. The question naturally arose How is it, that a comany the size and reputation that Stuttz possesses happened our way? It was for the novelty and change, besides filling in the summer months which is usually an "off" season for theatrical people. They intend playing north through our valley to Carson and every one should take advantage of seeing this company as often as possible. They carry a fine uniformed brass band, and an elegant orchestra, rendering the latest and best music, in itself is worth the price of admission which by the way is more than reasonable considering the enormous expense attached to bringing this organization to us, which is not only the largest, but the best we have ever seen. Wednesday evening of their engagement by special request a dance was given after the performance and highly enjoyed by young and old. This company carries the highest praise and recommendations from press, public and the pulpit, for their performances, which are classic, historical and refined, pure in moral tone and elevating to the mind, all of which, we also heartly endorse them. From here they go north, stopping a limited time at Bishop, Benton, Bodie, Bridgeport, Lundy, etc. where we know and feel the people will show a substantial recognization of this worthy company who will carry with them the good wishes of all our people, whose respect admiration they have won not only for their professional work, but also as ladies and gentlemen, together with honest and honorable business management and courtesy.

Bodie Clippings

The Miner Index is responsible for the following:

It is probable that all the cyanide plants, except that at Sunshine, will be in operation in a few days. Standard No. 1 is running and No. 2 will shortly fill its vats. The Victor Lester Bell is fixing up things and getting ready for work, and the South-end will at once be put in condition to manipulate tailings. These plants will employ quite a number of men, directly and otherwise, considerably increasing the local pay-roll.

N. W. Boyd, James Glenn and N. J. Salisbury returned from Bishop last Monday, where they organized a Lodge of Knights of Pythias with 25 members and left it in good working condition. They expected to find hot weather down there and get thawed out, but were disappointed. It was no warmer than at Bodie.

Plans for the largest cyanide plant on the coast were completed last week at Soderling's office, at the instance of J. S. Cain, who is associated with A. J. McCone in erecting a 200-ton plant on the Comstock to work a great mass of tailings.

Randsburg must be a very live place. A fiddler there writes to know if there is a good opening here for him. If there is we don't know it. If Randsburg can't support one wind-scraper it is not much of a camp.

A buxom hand-painted squaw waddled into the print-shop this morning and grinningly asked for some old papers. We pointed to the exchange pile and told her to pitch in. Selecting a number of the wickedest papers in the heap she strung them on a yard or two of hay-rope and brazenly proceeded to adjust a bustle around her massive loins. Never having witnessed such an exhibition before, we fainted dead away.

Elizabeth died a few days ago. She and Henry Ward will now have abundant opportunity to explain matters.

The "wave of prosperity" don't wave worth a cent.

When a man doesn't know enough to make a living his wife says he is too honest too succeed.

If a quarter of the floating rumors mature and materialize Bodie is on the edge of better times. We can stand a big wave of prosperity without fear of drowning for awhile.

The town is full of embryo "pugs" who will put on the gloves with anything that comes along. It behooves a man to cultivate a pretty civil tongue, if he would not have his nose set up under his hat-band.

Runaway

Cap. James met with an accident on Wednesday. He was driving Dr. Woodin's team and while on the piece of road between Stevens ditch and the river, the animals became frightened and bolted, turning the buggy over and throwing James on his head with such force as to render him unconscious. They broke loose from the buggy and are still running loose with the harness on. Anyone knowing their whereabouts please address Dr. Woodin.

Real Estate Transfers

The following deeds were filed for record during the week ending May 6, 1897:

Frank and Marie V. Fitzgerald to A. W. Eibeshutz—Land at Fish Springs, $5.

Frank Elijah and wife to A. C. Freeman—Water rights on Williams Creek, $500.

Henry Malone and C. F. Fuller to Arthur D. Cole— Arastra and arastra site at Fish Springs, $5.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. Va., and one of the most widely known men in the State, was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June, 1894, Evans, then salesman for the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size, and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

A half dozen dusky females of the Piute tribe have occupied boxes at our theater every night this week. Arrayed in their brightest attire, they look stolidly on at each performance.

CREASE AND INCREASE.

An elephant wears more creases to his trousers than any other animal. They seem to be sort of a kilt pleat with a bias slope. He is not very fashionable, but is up to date in taking care of himself. Some sudden, violent pains crease, twist or contract the muscles or tendons, and this is the nature of a bad sprain. If neglected, the creases increase, and so does the pain, until sometimes it is very difficult to straighten them out, but by the prompt use of St Jacobs Oil, the friction or rubbing in its application and the curative qualities of the oil will smooth out the worst twist or crease and get the muscle in natural shape, where it will remain, restored, strengthened, cured. Promptness in using it insures prompt cure, and when the sprain is cured, it is cured for good.

Necessity the Mother of Invention.

"If a man keeps his eyes open, he sees many a funny thing while riding on street cars," said a regular patron of the Peters avenue line. "If you will take a ride on this line some dark night, frequently ahead of the car you'll see a light waved across the track, and if you watch closely you will see the motorman begin applying the brakes, and the car will stop, and a smiling colored gentleman will board the car and laughingly say that he got this car to stop for him. I found, upon asking a conductor one day, that the negroes in this part of the town have caught on to the fact that as that part of the city is black at night the motormen of the swift moving cars cannot detect their presence on the track in sufficient time to stop their cars for them, so they, figuratively, 'hang out a light for the car to stop,' and it seems to work both to the satisfaction of the colored population and the motormen on the cars." Necessity is the mother of invention, and it seems our colored brother has hit upon a scheme to offset the lack of lights on those streets back of town traversed by electric cars.—New Orleans Picayune.

X Rays and Diamonds.

One excellent use to which the new X rays can be put should interest women. It seems that by their aid one can readily determine whether diamonds are real or false, for the rays pass quite through real diamonds, leaving them transparent, and not at all through false ones. A real parure when photographed would show only the mounting, but in a false one all the stones would turn out black. Strangely enough, the X rays will not penetrate glass. Eyeglasses, if photographed, come out black. This proved useful in the case of a Vienna glassworker who got a bit of glass into his finger. By the aid of the rays it was discovered, extracted and the workman cured.—St. James Gazette.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Bottled Up!

Whether in the form of pill powder or liquid, the doctor's prescription for blood diseases is always the same—mercury or potash. These drugs bottle up the poison and dry it up in the system, but they also dry up the marrow in the bones at the same time.

The suppleness and elasticity of the joints give way to a stiffness, the racking pains of rheumatism. The form gradually bends, the bones ache, while decrepitude and helplessness prematurely take possession of the body, and it is but a short step to a pair of crutches. Then comes falling of the hair and decay of the bones,—a condition truly horrible.

Contagious Blood Poison—the curse of mankind—is the most horrible of all diseases, and has always baffled the doctors. Their potash and mercury bottle up the poison, but it always breaks forth again attacking some delicate organ, frequently the mouth and throat, filling them with eating sores. S.S.S., is the only known cure for this disease. It is guaranteed purely vegetable, and one thousand dollars reward is offered for proof to the contrary. It never fails to cure Contagious Blood Poison, Scrofula, Eczema, Rheumatism, Cancer, or any other disease of the blood. If you have a blood disease, take a remedy which will not injure you. Beware of mercury; don't do violence to your system. Don't get bottled up! Our books sent free to any address. Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.

Dade Harkins' Wedding

By VIOLA ROSEBORO.

It was no thanks to Harry's wisdom that he had not made a decided blunder in his selection of a confidant, for Mrs. Peytee, like many a better woman, was all but sure to find a man in love an odious and tiresome or a noble and gratifying spectacle, according as he was not or was in love with herself, but now she was moved to an unusual patience with Harry, because she was sure that the colonel's eligibility for marriage and in all probability his inclination toward that state would be much increased by Charley's entrance upon it.

"I want to measure your finger, Miss Kate," said Harry, standing in front of her.

"Mercy on us, what for?" said Mrs. Peytee, leaning back and looking up at him with brilliant black eyes.

"Because I heard Miss Charley say that you and she wore the same sized gloves."

He was looking down upon her with a pleased fatuous sense of being rather neat in his way of introducing his subject and of shining a little in this early scene of the lovely happy drama he had in his mind.

Charley in turn was looking down upon them both from the garret window. She now saw him sit down on Mrs. Peytee's right hand, decidedly close to her, take a string from his pocket and begin what proved to be the troublesome and lengthy task of measuring the forefinger of her left hand. Of course it was Mrs. Peytee who took care that the little task should be amusingly difficult, and of course Harry was so innocent—in the masculine way—that he was all unwarned by his conscience of the coquettish character of these delays.

From her window Charley could even see the shy, happy embarrassment on his face and the quizzical, half languishing glance of the widow.

Naturally from all this she drew conclusions, and inevitably, like most human conclusions, they were erroneous.

How natural and assured her mistake was, however, how little it resembled the conduct so often displayed in the first act of a play by a heroine who sacrifices all ordinary intelligence to the interests of the playwright, probably only those can fully understand who have some knowledge of the curious and complicated code that governs flirtation and lovemaking in large sections of southern society. An exposition of this code would be interesting, it seems to me, but my present mission will be better met by simply saying that Charley, according to the ideas in which she was bred, had good grounds for feeling that she had looked upon a more significant scene than any that had passed between her and Harry, or that, if he were only flirting with the naughty Mrs. Peytee, it was only the more probable that he was only flirting with her—a form of amusement, this, by the way, in which up to some rather indefinite point he was encouraged by society—that is to say, by the women generally. Such things are mainly regulated by women in any society in the world, and it is perhaps not aside from my story to say that Harry Williams was exactly the sort of young male creature who never has any clear idea of what are the subtleties of any such code, no matter where he lives.

The measurement for that fatal ring was hardly finished when Charley turned and flung herself face down upon the hard floor. She had no consciousness of a right to blame any one. She was conscious only of pain and the determination to hide it.

Now, poor Charley was blessed or cursed, as you choose, with an unusual command of feminine powers of dissimulation, and her natural pride, which was great, was re-enforced by a social training favorable to its strongest development. Now, it put her upon a course of self control and play acting that for the time seemed like to cost her cruelly, although, according to her lights, she was behaving with just that virtue and discretion which, if southern women are to be believed, should most endure happiness. She treated Cousin Kate with deferential cordiality and met Harry, when escape would have been noticeable, with pleasant, elusive, mocking gayety. He felt and could not understand a saddening change in the temperature, argue against the fact with himself as he would.

Life in such a place as this is as if the whole world had taken hasheesh and the ordinary measurements of time were lost. The long hours in such a household are more than weeks amid life's ordinary routine.

By evening the day after she had devoted herself to this purpose Charley had contrived to spread a subtle impression of slight but growing weariness with Mr. Williams' society and of an awakening disposition to be interested in that of another young man. The offices of the mining company gave an unusual proportion of young men to the small circle of summer visitors at Overtenia. That was its one great recommendation.

In the meantime Charley was begging her father to let her go for a visit across the mountain to the Alpine House, a much larger and more fashionable caravansary. He paid small attention to her and put her off with saying he'd see about it after the wedding; that he must take her to that.

Harry cursed himself for a fool and carried himself bravely, with a sinking heart, but quite without that self seeking, domineering spirit of pursuit that women love in lovers. He had heard, it is true, of coquetries, retreats and fencing on the part of women in love affairs, and on these traditions he tried to hang a slender hope.

What in the world would ever become of sincere lovers, handicapped by the helpless simplicities and duplicities of youth, in a society where they are left to work out their own salvation, if it were not for the faint guidance offered by the literature of love stories!

But already the ring had been sent for. Three days passed, and the wedding was at hand. Nearly all his guests from the hotel were to make the journey to Art Harkins' in "a big wagon," sitting upon straw piled in its bed.

Harry had given up the hope of the buggy ride with Charley. He was afraid to propose it lest he should be refused, but under the encouragement of her smiles the same idea had entered the brain of the other young man. He engaged the buggy and engaged Charley to ride in it.

So lightly did Mrs. Peytee carry her duties that she climbed into the big wagon, ignorant of this little game of puss in the corner and supposing Harry was carrying out the campaign he had sketched her. Her mind was uncommonly preoccupied with plans for the subjugation of the colonel, who had been showing of late a coquetry unbecoming a gentleman and a solider, particularly one so rheumatic.

Harry saw Charley depart in a bitterness of soul too deep to be profaned by the pen of such a light minded character as myself. Then, his feet carrying him as if with a volition of their own, he started to walk through the woods to Harkins', the place where he could look upon her once more. There was no reason to suppose that in any case he would not see her frequently for years to come, but he did not think about that. He felt as if that night bounded life.

As Harry came out of the primitive forest upon the wood pile that occupied Art Harkins' front yard he could see through the door of the log house, by the light of the little festal fire burning in the big fireplace, the newly arrived guests as they greeted Mrs. Harkins and the white gowned, red armed bride. Mrs. Harkins, in her purple calico, met the occasion with the true mountaineer's unspoiled, easy cordiality, blessedly unconscious of any real social distinctions between white folks. Dade showed an assurance of a different nature. There was a something in her hearty welcome that might be attributed to a tolerable understanding of the business of the coal company, but similarly fortifying knowledge failed to confer the same ease upon her father. He shifted uneasily about the room, wearing, sure enough, his broad hat upon his head, but touching it politely when any of the ladies spoke to him, and behind him, when he could get there, kept the shamefaced groom elect, sunk in that peculiarly painful misery which apes delight and marks the man in his position the world over.

Harry watched Charley as she gently insisted upon speaking to him and bent her tact to lightening his sufferings for an instant. Then as she disappeared from his view he came on, as if pulled by a string, and after speaking to his hostess stationed himself where, from across the room, he could best see her.

Besides the hotel party only the white haired old circuit riding preacher and a few of the Harkins' kinspeople were present, but these, with the family, were enough to establish their own rigid rule of etiquette upon the company. Every one was forced to feel that the least gayety or relaxation would be a grave indecorum, and the occasion was marked by much the same manners as prevail at funerals. When the company were all seated, the young couple left the room, and three minutes passed, during which silence prevailed or was broken only by whispers. Before they knew it Harry and Charley caught themselves in the act of exchanging a glance—such a glance as for awhile had made such a world of intimate companionship for them.

When the bridal pair entered and the preacher took his position before them, two young men, sons of the house, unseen before, came slouching in by a back door, staying near it, and with sullen shamefacedness ignoring the presence of the guests. After the ceremony the cloud still did not lift. The guests from the hotel, the bride and groom and the preacher were immediately ushered into another room and seated at a long supper table. Mrs. Harkins tried to get Art to take his place at its head, but Art pulled his hat farther down on his head and went out of doors without a word.

A Philadelphia Street Car Idyl.

The old Callowhill street horse cars, relics of the antetrolley days, were never remarkable for great speed. A lady and gentleman boarded one of these cars the other night about 10:30 o'clock and after jogging along for several blocks the car came to a standstill. Then the front door opened and the driver's head appeared. "Say, Bill," it called back to the conductor, "won't you run over to the drug store and buy me a stamp? I've got to write to my girl tonight." Nothing loath, Bill did as requested and, after a short chat with the clerk, sauntered leisurely back to his car. At Sixteenth street the lady and gentleman alighted, expecting to take a north bound car, but none was in sight. Turning to the conductor, the gentleman remarked jestingly: "You kept us waiting while you got your stamp. Why not wait here until our car comes?" Bill motioned to the driver, who was watching him, and said: "Jim, this gent wants me to wait here until their car comes. Can't we do it?" "Why, cert," replied Jim. The Sixteenth street cars were blocked, and it was ten minutes before one came along. "Good night," called Bill as his two passengers alighted. "See youse again!"—Philadelphia Record.

The Force of Habit.

Brooklyn contains more people who look to see that which does not exist, and which they know does not exist, than any city in the world. And it is simply because of habit. Nearly all the railroads in that city, in the older part of the city, or Brooklyn as it was before Williamsburg was annexed and assimilated, converge at the city hall, and until two or three years ago the town clock was in the cupola of that building. During the many years that it announced the time by bell and indicated it on its four dials to the Brooklynites every person who passed "the hall" looked to see what time it was. The habit became an instinct to most Brooklynites, and today, although they know that fire destroyed the cupola, clock and all, there is hardly a person who steps from a car at the City Hall square or passes the building who does not look inquiringly toward the spot where the clock was but is not.—New York Times.

HUNTING THE KANGAROO.

Exciting Sport for the Sportsmen of the Australian Island Continent.

There are two ways of hunting kangaroos in Australia, one followed by native hunters and the other by white men. The natives surround a herd of the animals, narrow the circle and then, when the kangaroos dash at them in wild efforts to escape, kill them with short spears and clubs, commonly called waddies. It is lively work for the native. The kangaroo uses its hind legs viciously and with great judgment, and dogs, horses and men have been torn open by the nails of its hind feet.

The white men prefer to follow the kangaroo with dogs. Every herd of kangaroos has a leader, known as the old man or boomer, which warns its followers of the approach of danger by stamping the ground with its hind feet, making a booming sound that starts all the kangaroos in hearing on a run. A scared herd will run over twenty or thirty miles at times, or until it reaches safety. A male weighs from 100 to 175 pounds and is seven or eight feet long. The English make up parties of hunters and follow the kangaroo with dogs somewhat like fox hounds, but of greater size and strength. Women and men join in the sport, riding to the hounds on good horses.

"Riding to the place where a herd of the beasts had been seen the day before by bushmen," a Sportsman's Magazine writer says, "we came to the bush, a growth of ubiquitous trees and tree ferns, fit to brush one off his horse. Quiet was the word of caution passed when we came near the sparsely grown ground beyond the bush where the kangaroos had been seen. The dogs were called in and then we rode from the bush into view of the herd's sentinel, and then away went the kangaroos, followed by the dogs. The kangaroos could not run, but, folding their fore legs across their breasts, they sat down. Then, with tail and hind legs, away they went by hops, no hop being less than twenty feet long and others being more than thirty feet. They cleared shrubs twelve feet high.

"Curiously enough, the kangaroo travels faster up hill than down, the dogs catching up on the down slopes. The beast sometimes breaks its neck while running down hill by going head over heels. The does began to throw their young out of their pouches, and we knew they were hard pressed. They turned suddenly for the water. We found the dogs at a water hole with two boomers at bay. We dismounted and, drawing our knives, waited an opportunity to run in and hamstring them. A dog rushed in and was caught by the hind leg of a boomer and pressed under water, where it was quickly drowned. Then a dog got one of the beasts by the back and threw it, whereupon my cousin quickly hamstrung it, while I rapped it on the nose with my whip, killing it. We had kangaroo tail soup and steaks for dinner for several days."—New York Sun.

Justifiable Elation.

The Washington Star chronicles the fact that a somewhat elderly gentleman entered his own house one day last autumn with such a look of self-satisfaction upon his countenance that his wife was at once struck by it; and like a faithful spouse, she proceeded to put him on his guard.

"Richard," she said, "I hope you have not forgotten that pride goeth before a fall."

"My dear," was the reply. "I am perfectly familiar with that admonition. And I have reason to fear that in my case it applies in a literal as well as in a figurative sense. But I can't help it."

"You are not usually this way."

"I know it. When I was graduated at the head of my class in college I was as meek and modest as the last man on the list. When I was elected to office and ran away ahead of my ticket, I could have defied anybody to accuse me of showing the least elation. When I won my first big lawsuit, I endeavored to bear success with the same philosophy which I should have felt was proper in defeat. When I got my picture in the paper as a leading citizen in my community, I could have defied any of my old-time friends to detect the slightest difference in my behavior.

"But this case is different. I hope you'll bear with me, but I've just ridden my bicycle three times round the block without falling off, and I just can't help putting on airs."

Well-Lighted Ocean Highways.

The best lighted bit of ocean highway is that known as "The Downs," where lights are much needed to warn ships away from the Goodwin Sands, which stretch from Dover to Ramsgate, at a distance of about five miles from the mainland. There are four lightships for the protection and lighting of that short bit of ocean highway. The Suez Canal has now been so brilliantly illuminated at night by electric lights that the time required for passing through it has consequently been reduced from forty-eight hours in the year 1883 to twenty-seven hours by the year 1889, and since then to twenty-four hours. There are lighthouses in the proportion of one to fourteen miles in England, one to thirty-four in Ireland, and one to thirty-nine in Scotland. Throughout the world there are about 6,000; England having 817, United States 802, Canada and Newfoundland 494, France 444; around the European coasts there are 3,477.

The Atlantic's Depth.

The depth of the Atlantic between the Canary Islands and the West Indies is something awful. A pretty level bottom runs right away from the African islands to the American ones, gradually deepening to nearly 19,000 feet. At this spot we might sink the highest point of the Alps and still have nearly half a mile of sea water covering it.

"And a feather in your cap," argued the world.

She wavered. For it was as yet a matter of doubt whether feathers would be worn, or wings or whole birds or aigrettes merely.—Detroit Journal.

NATURE'S BEST REMEDY.

Paine's Celery Compound Pevents Nervous Breakdown.

Spring has come.

It is time for all persons to think seriously of their health.

But that doesn't mean taking the first spring remedy that happens to be offered.

Persons who make it their business to get the most effective remedy to be had are sure to carry home Paine's celery compound. No other remedy is capable of cleansing the blood, nourishing the nerves and regulating the bowels and digestive organs like Paine's celery compound.

If you are troubled at all by rheumatism, neuralgia, headaches or sleeplessness, even if these attacks come only now and then, now is the time to purify the system of them. Don't procrastinate and daily till frightened into doing something when you find the task of getting well has assumed desperate proportions.

Paine's celery compound will cure kidney trouble, heart palpitation and disordered liver accurately, intelligently and permanently when other remedies only raise hopes that are never fulfilled.

Paine's celery compound, which owes its origin to the most distinguished physican and investigator this country ever produced, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., of Dartmouth college, has been publicly indorsed among medical experts as the only spring remedy in any sense entitled to that name.

It can be said without fear of contradiction that no other remedy can truthfully refer to men and women so responsible, so trustworthy, so convincing, because of their straightforward, enthusiastic and easily-verified testimonials in praise of Paine's celery compound.

It is foolish to take poor health "philosophically" these spring days. There is no reason why anyone should sit hands in lap, and submit to headaches, poor appetite, continual tired feeling or constipation. If every disheartened invalid will go right at getting well by using Paine's celery compound, that person will be astonished and delighted with the quickness with which this wonderful remedy is able to call a halt to wasting diseases, diseases of debility and a "rundown" condition.

Paine's celery compound does wonders in making people well.

Here is what a woman, an ambitious and hard-working member of the legal profession in New York city, says of this great remedy:

220 4th Ave., New York.

While a student in the New York university law school and under great pressure from work and study, I was advised to take Paine's celery compound. I did so, and its beneficial results to one whose nerves are under the trial of severe mental effort, I am only too ready to assert. After taking three bottles I found that it produced quietness of nerves and induced sleep, very beneficial to my health. For those troubled with insomnia I can heartily recommend it as a harmless inducer of sleep on account of its quieting effect on the nerves. Yours very truly,

(Signed.) Florence H. Dangerfield.,
Attorney and Counselor at Law.

Paine's celery compound, which makes the weak strong, has received testimonials from thousands of people who had almost despaired of ever again being in perfect health.

Poultry Shelters.

The barrel poultry house shown in the first illustration makes a capital house for a small lot of birds. Any cracks or crevices should be filled up with clay or putty. The inside should have a good coating of lime, in which some carbolic acid has been mixed, and the outside should be well tarred or painted. When perfectly dry it should be placed on bricks or blocks of wood, so as to raise it a few inches from the ground.

The other sketch represents a more elaborate house, which can be made according to the number of birds for which it is required. The illustration explains itself, and the space under the floor is of great advantage, as it gives protection from the weather and is much appreciated by the birds. The house should be removed every few days on to fresh ground. It will be noted that two important points, light and ventilation, have received attention from the designer of this house. Strong handles placed at each end would facilitate removal, or the house could readily be fixed on wheels. If corrugated iron is used for the roof it should have a wooden lining, as the former is a rapid conductor of heat and cold.

Transplanting Large Trees.

When a large tree is removed from the ground, as much earth as possible should be taken up with it, so that the small, fibrous roots may not be greatly disturbed. The tree will have a much greater chance of living in its new location if this is done. Dig first about the trunk at some little distance away, but do not cut off the big roots that are met. Follow these out for some distance. When the trench is dug about the tree, work under the roots and get chains or ropes about the ball of earth in two or more directions. Then set a long pry in the manner shown in the illustration, when the tree can be gently raised. A drag or stone boat can then be slipped under the ball of earth and the tree hauled home on it, without disturbing the roots in the least. With the earth left about the roots in this way, even trees of considerable size can be safely transplanted, and they will hardly seem to notice the change in their surroundings.—Exchange.

MANNER OF TRANSPLANTING.

Cob Charcoal for Hogs.

Fattening hogs eat charcoal greedily, but that made by charring corn on the cob is eaten best, and this in our experience has proven all that is needed to keep them in health. But in one of the Minnesota Farmers' Institutes, Theodore Louis tells how he makes cob charcoal on a large scale where hogs are kept by the hundred. He digs a hole five feet square at top and five feet deep. Into this he throws some cobs, setting fire to them as they are thrown in until the hole is filled. Then the hole is completely covered, banking earth against the edges of the cover. In 12 hours uncover, and the cobs will be found completely charred, so that they will easily crumble. Six bushels of this is then mixed with eight pounds of salt, two quarts of air-slacked lime and a bushel of wood ashes. Dissolve one and a quarter pounds of copperas with hot water, and sprinkle over the mass. This mixture aids digestion and destroys the intestinal worms with which fattened hogs are always infested. Hogs, thus fed, have no occasion to root, as they get what they require without this labor.

Feeding Value of Apples.

We do not think enough of the value of the orchard for feeding its fruits to the farm animals. Apples are nutritious, and an aid to the good digestion of other food. The mild acid of them is excellent for the health of the stock and we all know how gratefully they will receive a feed of them at any time. For the cows they are especially desirable; a peck of them chopped and sprinkled with meal of any kind will help much to add to the flow of milk of the cows. Horses love this fruit, and they tend to help in the shedding of the coat, by their gently laxative effect. When the selection is made for the spring planting, a few of some of the sweet varieties, ripening from the summer to the winter, should not be forgotten for this use. We may begin with the early Sweet Bough for the first, then the autumn Sweet Bough and the old Pumpkin Sweet, and for later use there are the Talman Sweet and the Winesap, all productive sorts and unexcelled for this use as well as for market.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Locating the Pear Orchard.

A slightly descending slope is most favorable in order to precipitate drainage and the discharge of surplus surface water, but it is not essential that any particular point of the compass should be secured. Shelter from the rake of the wind is important. The pear is a companionable tree and will luxuriate when supported by other trees around it. In close garden culture a degree of humidity is preserved, and there is less evaporation from the foliage where the strong winds are broken, the growth will be more vigorous and healthy. There must, however, be sufficient air and sunlight to mature the wood and the fruit. If the site is high, it will be an advantage to plant an evergreen bent to the windward, both for the health of the trees and also to prevent the falling of the fruit during high winds. On the other hand, a low, cold and peaty position, subject to fogs and frosty nights, is objectionable.

A strong, retentive loam inclined to clay is a preferable soil.—Fruit Grower.

Ripening Cream.

A good way is to hold the cream at a temperature of sixty degrees for twelve to fourteen hours after the first taste of acid is apparent, and then judgment, formed from experience, will do the rest. The method for warming the cream for ripening is all right, but it will be necessary to keep the temperature of the room at about the temperature it is desired to keep the cream.

For a starter, some ripened cream or buttermilk from the previous churning is often used to "start" the ripening. A better starter is made by taking some skim milk from a healthy, fresh-milking cow, warm it up to 85 or 90 degrees, and hold it at that tempreature till it becomes thick. Put into the cream from three to five per cent. of this starter, and if the cream is held at 60 to 65 degrees for twelve to fourteen hours it will be found sufficiently ripened.—Massachusetts Plowman.

The Home Dairy.

If on every farm more attention is paid to the home dairy, a better product of butter will be turned out, and a greater yield per cow will be realized. The better the article the more sure the sale; and the larger the yield per cow the greater the net profit.

Never try to do dairy work with beef cattle. Never trust alone to the pasture to supply the food. Be sure to have necessary conveniences of the best kind for securing the full quantity of butter fat from the milk. Every home dairy should raise its choicest heifer calves, in order that the supply of good dairy cows may be kept up.

It will pay for the trouble and expense. Beside the ready sale at all seasons for good butter, the milk can be utilized in many ways, and the droppings in the barnyard will be valuable as a fertilizer. Build up the home dairy on a strong basis.

Oats Need Rich Soil.

The oat crop will make a fair success where other grains would fail. But it needs rich soil quite as much as any, and is especially benefited by phosphate fertilizers. The average yield is low, because the crop is generally put on the poorest soil on the farm. We have grown 90 bushels of oats per acre on a four-acre field planted the previous year with potatoes, and with 150 pounds of fertilizer drilled in with the oat seed in the spring.—Exchange.

Gleanings.

Top dress the garden with fine manure, and if not well drained, throwing up in ridges will facilitate early work in the spring.

Good cream rising can only be attained by keeping the milk sweet as long as possible and skimming off the cream while the milk is sweet.

All wagons for heavy loads should have four-inch tires. Good roads are impossible otherwise. Abate the road tax of those who use wide tires.

When all artificials have been tried, few or none are so reliable or available as barnyard manure, which is too much disregarded by many farmers.

Success in growing peaches demands frequent examinations in search of borers which are found just below the surface of the ground. We scratch them out with an old butcher knife.

FOR SUNDAY READING

THE GOSPEL OF GRACE IS HERE EXPOUNDED.

Faith Is Not a State of Inaction—Always Something Better for Which to Strive—Sorrow in Itself Not the Measure of Repentance.

The Power of Faith.

FAITH is not a state of inaction, security and contentedness; it is a constant reaching forth towards a higher and fuller life. The least exercise of it is productive of wonderful results. God has set such a value upon the least grain of faith, and given it such a power, that it can overcome mountainous difficulties and effect extraordinary transformations. But God means that the seed should become a tree. Plant a seed in a flowerpot that is full of soil, motionless, changeless, inert, that would remain as it is forever, and at once the presence of the seed in the soil creates a vortex of motion and change. The seed, as it germinates and grows, draws the particles of the soil into its own composition and structure, imparts to them a higher nature, organizes the sand and makes it living material, attracts the dew and the sunshine, and brings all the powers of nature to its help that it may grow. And so plant a seed of faith in Christ in a dead human heart, and what a change and commotion it causes! It raises up the nature into newness of life; it lays all the powers of heaven and earth under contribution for its health and sustenance. But as it grows it accomplishes greater wonders in the tree-stage than in the seed-stage. The produce of the minute grain of mustard seed is the greatest of herbs, occupying a large space and doing a great work. Look what a tree does in the economy of nature. How it forms the source of rivers and streams, how it regulates the seasons, and alters the climate of a locality. And more astonishing still is the effect of faith when it reaches the tree-stage and becomes a resting-place for weary creatures on its boughs and gives refreshment to multitudes by its shade and fruit.—Hugh Macmillan, D. D.

Moving Upward.

It is because we are set in a lowly lot that we have the great privileges—such, indeed, it is—of moving upward and passing from one new horizon to another. Otherwise life would be stale and unwelcome. If we have overtaken our end we shall wither like ripe leaves by the law of our being, and good cheer will be no part of our lot. The soul soon discovers that the seasons of greatest gladness are those of greatest advancement, and that with all lull comes loss of joy. And thus will every soul be permitted to exult in the credit and bliss of the greatest salvation it has taken a part in winning, and this merit and delight can be reached in no other way. Only those jewels will be lustrous which we win for our own crowns, and only those lives happy that do the winning.

The Measure of Repentance.

Sorrow is not in itself the measure of repentance. It is not necessary that one should dwell upon his sin and weep over it and make unavailing efforts to wipe it out. The measure of true repentance is the degree in which a man gets away from his sin and from the possibility of repeating it. His deliverance lies in the future, not in the past. He must look forward and not backward. The hope is that he shall so turn and so live that in the time to come when memory looks back over a blackened past, he shall be unable to connect his present self with what memory shows him, that the things which shock and shame him shall be things which he can in no way associate with his life or feeling.

Begin at Once.

A young Chinaman, a learned man who had received several degrees from the Chinese schools, heard the gospel, and said it was what he had been wishing for. He accepted Christ. A little while after this a native Christian teacher asked him, "What have you done for Christ since you believed?"

He replied: "O, I am a learner!"

"Well," said the questioner, "when you light a candle do you light it to make the candle more comfortable or that it may give light?"

He replied: "To give light."

He was asked: "Do you expect it to give light after it is half burnt or when you first light it?"

He replied: "As soon as I light it."

"Very well," was the reply, "go thou and do likewise; begin at once." Shortly after there were fifty native Christians in the town as the result of that man's work.

What We Need.

We need in our churches and in our individual lives a good old-fashioned outpouring of the Holy Ghost. We need such revivals in this country as swept over Scotland in the eighteenth century and over our own land in the first part of this century. In those days men and women fell down before the preached word as if cut down in battle. The Presbyterian Church was born in a revival under the preachings of Calvin and Knox in Edinburgh; the Methodist Church grew out of a revival under the preaching of the Wesleys; the Cumberland Presbyterian Church grew out of a revival in the early part of this century in the South; the Lutheran Church grew out of a revival under the preaching of Luther; and so the world has been blessed by the state of religious fervor known as revival. We need a higher grace of spiritual life in order that we may have more power with God and man. We need it that we may do better work in the line of missions; we need it that we may live in the spiritual life, for without it we shall surely die.—C. L. Work, D. D.

"There Is No Other Side."

The Manhattan Liberal Club of New York City sent an invitation to Mr. Moody to meet one they should name in debate on the relative merits of Christianity and infidelity; to which Mr. Moody made this characteristic reply: "Somebody once asked Charles Sumner to hear the other side of slavery. 'Hear the other side?' he replied, 'there is no other side.' I would as soon discuss the relative merits of Christianity and infidelity. Nobody who studies history need hesitate in answering the question. And I know what Jesus Christ has done for me during the last forty years since I have trusted him. Let the members of your club accept Christ as their personal Savior, and they need not waste time discussing such a question. If I had a remedy that never failed to cure disease for forty years, I should not stop to compare its merits with another remedy."—Record of Christian Work.

Endureth Forever.

Yesterday a friend took an opal and pressed it in his palm, and held it there for a few moments, and then took it out and showed it to me, and it was all flashing with light and with color from the heart of it. So God takes you and me, poor stones with no light or life in us, and He holds us in His palm, and He presses us to His heart, and then takes us, as it were, away from Him for the moment, and out from us there flash patience and courage, and hope and love, which His heart and His warmth have put into us. They will die and be forgotten, but the great hand that holds and the great heart that presses and the great soul that inspires will not die and will not be forgotten. The grass withereth and flower fadeth, but the word of our God endureth forever.—Lyman Abbott, D. D.

Right.

Light after darkness,
Gain after loss,
Strength from suffering,
Crown after cross,
Sweet after bitter,
Song after sigh,
Home after wandering,
Praise after cry.

Sheaves after sowing,
Sun after rain,
Sigh after mystery,
Peace after pain.
Joy after sorrow,
Calm after blast,
Rest after weariness,
Sweet rest at last.

Near after distant,
Gleam after gloom,
Love after loneliness,
Life after tomb.
After long agony,
Rapture of bliss!
Right was the pathway
Leading to this!

"As Silver Is Tried."

It is only the pure hearts, says the Union Gospel News, that can endure unharmed the tests and trials that come to it in life.

A lady picked up a ring in the street, and took it to a jeweler to know if it were of any value. He decided that it was gold, but to make sure for her, said, "I will put it in acid; if real, there will be no change; if imitation, the acid will corrode and destroy it." The ring was dropped in, the lady watched anxiously, and received back her treasure, uninjured, only purer and brighter for the testing.

In this way our hearts are sometimes tested in this sinful world. Pure hearts will stand the test and come out bright and clear. We ought often to examine our hearts to see if they are the pure metal that can go through this world without being corrupted. A pure heart is an invaluable jewel.

In the Long Run.

Good, steady work counts. High pressure activity makes the most fuss and show, but it is generally unreliable, spasmodic and liable to reactions. Rush, dash, impetuosity and excitement catch the eye, and are more boastful and pretentious, but the calm, persistent and onward movement ensures the highest and best gains in the long run.

Small Courtesies.

One cannot too seduously look after the small couretsies in one's conduct, and, if one be charged with the management of a household, in the accustomed ways of the family. Habits count for everything here, and example is better than precept.—Margaret E. Sangster.

Church and Clergy.

Some years ago the Rev. Dr. Crane, ments, in which he condemned novelist, wrote a tract on popular amusements, in wrich the condemned novel-reading as one of the vices of the age.

"My brethren," said Dr. Boyd Carpenter, Bishop of Ripon, England, in a recent address, "I beg you to take hold of your own heart and look it straight in the face." Bishop Carpenter is an Irishman.

Mrs. Daniel Howard, of Jeffersonville, Ind., had her home connected by telephone with the Presbyterian Church, being at times prevented by illness from attending the service. The experiment was very successful.

Bishop Grafton was on the streets recently, and when asked what he thought of the new cult of King Charles I., which was begun in Philadelphia—the unveiling of a portrait over one of the altars of an Episcopal church—said that it was "the worship of a King who had his head chopped off by a number of very respectable persons who had lost theirs!"

GOWNS AND GOWNING

WOMEN GIVE MUCH ATTENTION TO WHAT THEY WEAR.

Brief Glances at Fancies Feminine, Frivolous, Mayhap, and Yet Offered in the Hope that the Reading Prove Restful to Wearied Womankind.

Gossip from Gay Gotham.

New York correspondence:

KEEPING away from silks doesn't seem to involve much disappointment, for most women find the cloths and suitings that succeed the silks entirely satisfactory. Then for those who are still loyal to silks, there are new weaves that the most captious fashion's formalists indorse, so a woman can have silk anyhow, if only her purse will permit. Then in house dresses the silks that are forbidden for outdoor wear are permissible, linings and trimmings furnish abundant demand for it, and there's no sign that silk manufacturers need despair. The daintiest of house dresses are still made from taffetas, swivel, Japanese and Chinese silks, but even in this stronghold of the displaced material the influence of the change is plainly shown by new gowns of the more newly fashionable material. In the initial picture and the one following it are shown two dresses of the newer sort, one very simple, the other of more elaborate design.

That beside the initial was in a small check cheviot, its bodice laid in a few pleats in the waist in front and in back. It had a vest with revers and collar of white pique dotted with red, which hooked invisibly in the center. The cloth fronts also had revers and the sleeves had turned back cuffs of the cheviot besides those of pique. A white leather belt came around the waist. The other dress combined Scotch plaid suiting and dark blue cloth in an unusual way. A simple blouse waist was of the plaid, but over it was a bolero of the other material, which was adorned with large blue revers covered with white lace. The skirt had on each side an inserted panel of blue cloth strapped across the top with cord and buttons. Stock collar and belt were of blue velvet, and the fitted sleeves of the plain blue material were finished with puffs of the plaid.

Looking ahead to late spring and summer dresses, the opportunities for economical scheming in semi-transparent fabrics are highly attractive to ingenious devices. New models for this period are remarkably handsome, and though those now perfected are for the most part highly wrought their elaborateness can be copied cheaply with good management. In the third picture is one of this class, a gown of mauve grenadine made over coral silk and trimmed very freely with linen embroidery. Wide panels of the embroidery showed on the skirt, designs of it were placed between the panels, and the bodice, the tight portions of the sleeves, and collar and loops show the same garniture. Coral silk furnished the deep corselet and the bolero fronts.

An important consideration in a dress of transparent stuff is the lining. Ponder that point carefully before you indulge in any of the lovely transparencies that are already making us feel that we really must provide for August.

GRENADINE BRIGHTENED WITH SILK.

She who has a part of a skirt or so left over, or in some other way has a supply of silk that will not only do for lining, but that economy requires should be used for lining, since it is not fit for anything else, she may feel she has a right to get an organdie. But remember that organdies disappear like the foam off a green roller. They are pretty once or twice, but they do not last from season to season, and they don't make over to any advantage. You may decide that it is better to spend a little more money and buy a pretty crispy silk, a new one with a little flower in it, that allows you to dash a bit of color at throat and waist this season, and then to change the whole scheme next year. This is economy.

No amount of persuasion, however, will down the organdie dress, and so the artist has put in her fourth contribution one of the earliest models into which white organdie enters. It was white figured organdie over pale blue lining in the skirt, the bodice being light blue silk crepon, with a narrow basque and a deep yoke of blue silk, to which the crepon was sewed with a head. Over the shoulders were straps of pale blue satin ribbon ending in rosettes in back and front, and the belt was of the same ribbon. Crepon gave the sleeves.

Trick dresses were never so easily accomplished as now. Plan if possible one entire rig, and then make combinations from that as a center. For instance, you have new silk, black and white striped, enough to line a generous skirt at least to the knees, and barely enough of some handsome grenadine stuff in a light color to make the front and back of a bodice, with no sleeves. On so much we will start. Get black grenadine, a weave that will show through, but not too clearly. If the skirt has only lining of silk to the knees, then from the knees up there must be rows of braid, so that the change of lining will not be noticed. Now a jaunty bolero with sleeves to go over the grenadine sleeveless bodice. We'll say the grenadine is white with a pale green thread, something that once made an opera cloak, perhaps. This bodice fits perfectly at the back, and in front is drawn in folds from the throat to the fold of black satin that finishes the edge at the waist. You will set a fall of lace at each shoulder to hang down under the turn-back revers of the bolero, and there will be a touch of the same lace at the wrists. Isn't that a stunning costume? It will do for the theater, for dinner or for any high-neck occasion. You will line your black satin coat with pale green, and when it falls open the effect is lovely.

This year's grass linons are a vast improvement on the plain ones of a year ago. The new lot, with their stripes, dots or figures, are much handsomer than the old weaves, and are sure to be much worn. Indicative of how they will be employed is the gown of the concluding picture, which was of figured linon over a leaf green silk lining. The bodice was drawn across the front in surplice fashion, fastening at the shoulder with a bow of green ribbon and white lace. The sleeves were gathered all the way to the wrist, headings of the gathers showing, and were topped with small caps of the goods finished with lace ruffles. The high medici collar had a lace ruffle and bow of green ribbon at one side. Ruffles are to be used a great deal next summer in trimming skirts, and they will appear frequently on just such skirts as this one, either in a Spanish flounce or in an abundance of smaller ones.

Confronted by much that is tempting in goods and fashions, "Can't afford it" is the average woman's cry; and of course she really can't if she is to set about buying the new things at the discouraging prices at which novelties are always held. But let her first take stock of what she already has, and then sally forth to study styles and ways and means at one and the same time. If she can only manage to weather spring without complete bankruptcy, the rest ought to be easy, for no dresses are so easily made to seem much better than they are as summer rigs.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 14 1897

On the 23d ult Justice Temple of the Supreme Court handed down an interesting decision involving the law of community property, of which little or no notice has been taken. In 1891 the Legislature passed an act changing the rule which has prevailed in this State since its organization, concerning the right of the husband to control the property of himself and wife. That rule has been that the husband, being the head of the family, should have the absolute dominion of everything that he and his conjugal partner should earn during the continuation of the married relation. The wife's interest in the community property accrued only upon the death of the husband or a divorce. Then her interest—which was described by Justice Field nearly forty years ago as a "mere expectancy"—became a vested right and she succeeded to one-half of the joint possessions.

It seems that the act of 1891 was the result of the presence in California of a few husbands, who, in order to defraud their wives, dissipated the community property. In that enactment the Legislature said the husbands should still continue to control the community property, but that he could not convey it away except for a valuable consideration. The case just decided by the Supreme Court was that which for a time attracted considerable attention in San Francisco. It arose out of the attempt of Mr. Claus Spreckels to revoke a gift which he had made to his son Rudolph of certain stock in the Hawaiian Commercial Company on the ground that it was community property, and that in giving it away he infringed the rights of his wife, Mrs. Anna C. Spreckels. As the gift was made since 1891 the case came fairly under the law.

Justice Temple reviews the law of the married relation in an exhaustive opinion, and finds that any act restricting the right of the husband to control community property is unconstitutional. He says that the sole ownership of the joint earnings of husband and wife belong, under the constitution, to the husband and that he cannot be divested of it by statute. The constitutionality of the act of 1891 was not a point in the suit. So the learned Justice merely decides that it does not apply to any property acquired prior to its passage, and so, of course, it does not affect the gift to Rudolph Spreckels. But he intimates very strongly that in a proper case the court would declare it unconstitutional.

The decision is interesting, not only to wives and husbands, but to the people generally. It is a remarkable exposition of the law of community property, and is a distinct check to the theory which has long prevailed in this State that the Legislature can by enactment change the status of married people as to property.

A bill has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Kyle to provide for a Government telegraph system within the United States, to be under the government of a board consisting of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War and the Postmaster General, and shall consist of four trunk lines connecting the northeastern, the northwestern, western and southwestern and the southern part of the United States with the city of Washington, and that these trunk lines shall be connected with lines and offices established at such cities, towns and places as shall be for the public interest for the time being; all to be extended and increased as Congress may from time provide money therefor.

This telegraph line line shall be carried on and operated as a part of the postal system of the United Stotes, and the rates for the use thereof shall be established by the above-named board.

The bill further provides that there shall be no discrimination in the matter of charges and rates, with the exception of messages for the press, and in that case no publisher of any one newspaper or combination of newspapers shall be allowed better rates than any other.

It is provided that this Government telegraph line shall be constructed and kept in repair unber the direction and superintendence of the Secretary of War and through the Corps of Engineers.

That was a shocking fire disaster in Paris last week. It was the old story of a fire trap used for the purpose of entertaining an audience; insufficient exits and a panic following the alarm by which the doorways were blocked by human beings. The people trod each other down, and then followed the deadly work of the flames. It would seem that in such a city as Paris, which has very stringent regulations in all matters of building construction, such flimsy structures as the bazar hall could not have been erected; that the authorities would not have dared to consent to the putting up of such a death trap.

Bryan's visit to Los Angeles will be the event of events in the Angel city's annual history. Already arrangements are being made for receiving the distinguished visitor. Hazard's pavilion has been engaged for the speaking, and a monster banquet for which three thousand invitations will be issued will be a feature of the occasion.

The attorneys for Theodore Durrant assert that the officer who has charge of the hanging will be guilty of murder and will be arrested on that charge. Having tried every expedient known to the law they now have recourse to a few that are quite unknown.

The new law is now in force which requires one year's time after divorce before divorced persons can legally marry.

Two young men arrived in town this week after a rough trip over the desert. They left Los Angeles and started for Utah with a couple of bikes. At Mojave they concluded a jack was a necessity and are dividing time now between the three steeds.

Hundreds of thousands have been induced to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy by reading what it has done for others, and having tested its merits for themselves are to-day its warmest friends. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Zebras will become as tame as ponies, and are readily broken in for draught-work. The object of their tamers has been to breed a mule which, like the zebra is proof against the tsetse-fly. The zebras themselves will run well enough in a mule team, though they can not stand over-driving.

A man named Trullinger has been in the Valley for several days past buying mules. He states that he has a contract to supply a limited number to the Sharon estate. The price offered is twenty-five to thirty dollars a head for animals weighing 1,000 pounds.

Chris. Zabriskie and family were passengers on Monday's train for Benton. Mr. Zabriskie will leave next month for New York, where he will accept an important position in the office of F. M. Smith. He reports that B. F. Edwards and John McMillan, formerly of Candelaria, are doing a flourishing grocery business in Alameda.

Eugene De Burn, who has been associated with C. J. Stafford in a mining venture at Mazourka canyon left for his home at San Diego on Monday, going south via Keeler and Mojave. Mr. De Burn is city Superintendent of schools for San Diego and says that wielding the rod is more lucrative and easier than handling pick and shovel.

Will S. Beach of Randsburg has been in Independence all the week in business in the local Land Office. Mr. Beach is endeavoring to clear up the title to the land where the town of Randsburg is situated and secure a title from the Government in behalf of the inhabitants. To this end it will be necessary to bring a number of contests which will be heard later on.

William B. Carr died at his home in San Francisco last Sunday by accidental gas asphyxiation. Billy Carr was one of the best known men in California. Associated with J. B. Haggin he owned vast real estate and mining interests. A number of years ago he occupied a prominent place in State politics. At the time of his death he was strong and hearty, and actively engaged in extending his many business enterprises.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. Va., and one of the most widely known men in the State, was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering In June, 1894, Evans, then salesman for the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size, and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Bodie Clippings.

The Mines Index is responsible for the following:

Mrs. Annie Gherckins, the attractive little waitress at the Standard Hotel has gone to Glascow, Scotland, to look after a legacy left her by a wealthy aunt who died there recently.

When N. W. Boyd was at Bishop recently he purchased a pair of draught horses for Captain Sam Tyack of the Syndicate. They are noble brutes, weighing 3,000 pounds, and can haul a hill up steep grade.

It is surprising to note how much prospecting is being done about here. Placers, tailings and quartz are equally sought. There are still many good things to be found, and the persistent prospector will find some of them.

Miners just from Randsburg report that the place is duller than a Quaker prayer-meeting previous to the moving of the spirit. Only a few men are at work. But there good mines in the district.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following deeds were filed for record during the week ending May 13, 1897:

Mark Watterson and Richard Hession to S. D. Pratt—Land at Big Pine; consideration $236.

Mark Watterson and Richard Hession to Samuel Hall—Land at Big Pine; consideration $300.

O. G. Fuentes to L. W. Hancock—Half interest in mines at Beveridge; consideration $100.

W. H. Jenkins and wife to Sarah C. F. Wrinkle—Land at George's Creek; consideration $500.

Must Report to The Assessor.

An amendment passed at the recent session of the Legislature is of interest to every taxpayer in the State, relating as it does to the assessment of the property of persons neglecting or refusing to furnish the assessor with a sworn statement. The section, amended, now reads: If any person, after demand made by the assessor, neglects or refuses to give, under oath, the statement herein provided for, to comply with the other requirements of this title, the assessor must note the refusal on the assessment book, opposite the name of such person, and must make an estimate of the value of such property of such person, and the assessor must transmit on or before the 1st day of July each year to the board of supervisors a verified report in writing, separate from the assessment roll, containing a complete list of all persons who refuse or neglect to furnish a statement of their property as herein provided for, or to provipe for the requirements of this title, the amount of the assessment upon the property of such persons, with a statement of the particular facts, if any, upon which the assessment has been made, and the valuation of the property so assessed ascertained. The board of supervisors must investigate and inquire into all assessments and values so fixed by the Assessor, as prescribed by this section, and for that purpose must require each taxpayer affected by such assessment and valuation to make a statement under oath, within ten days from making an order requiring such statement, setting forth specifically, all the property owned or controlled, or in the possession of such taxpayer on the first Monday of March. If any taxpayer, after demand made by the board of supervisors, shall neglect or refuse to make and deliver to the said board of supervisors, the statement duly verefied, herein provided for, or to comply with the other requirements of this title, the said board of supervisors, sitting as a county board of equalization, must increase such assessment and valuation to such amount as the said board shall deem just; but the value fixed by the assessor must not, in any case, be reduced by the board of supervisors.

Test Cases.

Out of eighteen sheep cases tried in this county in October, 1895, four have been appealed to the Supreme Court to test the validity of the sheep ordinance; the cases appealed being as follows: Inyo County vs. Inda, Erraca, Higo, and Erro, each being separate. The main contention is that the sheepmen were not engaged in business in Inyo County, but were only passing through this county to Mono county. The cases have gone to the Supreme Court, and will be heard by that tribunal at its Obtober session in Los Angeles. Inyo County will be represented by R. S. Miner of Bridgeport, and the appellant sheepmen by Paul W. Bennett of Bakersfield. The outcome of these cases will be looked for with much interest.

Railroa | To Randsburg.

The building of a railroad from Kramer mer to Randsburg will be not only a substantial proof of the richness and permanency of the newly discovered California goldfields, but the road will be the greatest possible factor in the development of that section. At the same time it should be remembered that a great mining camp cannot be developed in a day. It took five years to make Cripple Creek what it is, and the history of lode mining will show that ample time for development is required even in the richest districts. Mining nowadays is a trade, a business, if you please, that requires capital, intelligence, hard work and patience as much as they are required in other lines. These very essentials have combined to make legitimate mining less and less the creature of chance.

A False Report Corrected.

The Register of May 6th contains the following:

As the report has been circulated about that Miss Vesta Tibbets' death was caused by some treatment used by Dr. J. S. McQueen in doing some dental work for her, we feel it no more than justice to him to contradict same, as he did no work whatever for her while in Hawthorne.

MAY H. HILTON,
GEO. WOODRUFF.

The prospector is now getting his traps ready for a summer tour in the wilderness. His work is the most fascinating of all occupations. Perhaps he will return elated with visions of wealth, having, as he thinks, struck the biggest thing anybody ever saw; maybe he never returns, but leaves his bones to bleach on the desert or in the hills. Prospectors have pioneered this mineral country and blazed the trail to wealth for others, but few of them have ever been adequately rewarded.

Must Be Recast.

Pat Keyes is having difficulty with his new gasoline engine. The machine has to be transported over the mountains by a pack train, and when it arrived here the piece composing the bed was found to weigh over 600 pounds. This will have to be sent back to San Francisco and recast in two pieces, so that it can be packed. Once the new plant is in operation, however, it will more than compensate for the trouble occasioned by the great saving it will make in the cost of ore reduction.

HIDDEN PLACES.

Why a weasel should hate a rat is strange, as he is only an elongated rat himself. Rats and mice love hidden places, and a weasel is about the only living thing that can find them out. Aches and pains are like rats and mice. They seek out the hidden places of the human system and gnaw and ravage the muscles and nerves. St. Jacobs Oil, like a weasel, knows how to go for them. It will pene rate to the secret recesses of the pain, and breaks up its habitation and drives it out. Rats and mice shun the corners where a weasel has been and pains and aches once fairly driven out by St. Jacobs Oil are permanently cured and seldom come back to their old haunts. There must be patience with the treatment; some chronic forms are subborn and resist, but the great remedy will finally conquer and give health and strength to the afflicted parts.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

A Young Woman Gains 20 Lbs.

HER PHYSICIANS IN IOWA SAID SHE WAS GOING INTO A DECLINE, AND THAT HER LUNGS WERE AFFECTED. THEY SENT HER TO NEVADA.

But to Fight Lung Troubles or Any Wasting Disease, Build Up Your Flesh.

From the Express, Los Angeles, Cal.

Two years ago, back in eastern Iowa, Miss Maude Lease began to go into a decline. She lost flesh rapidly. Her appetite failed. Fearful headaches nearly drove her frantic. She consulted local physicians—good, honest, practitioners. They told her that her lungs were affected; that medicine might alleviate, but a change of climate was the only remedy that offered a prospect of cure.

Ill and despondent she delayed as long as possible her departure, but at last it became imperative, and she came to an aunt at Verdi, Nevada, in the hope of finding health and strength in the pure air and among the pines of the Sierra Nevadas. But she continued to fail, and to add to her miseries, learned to know the anguished sufferings which attend that complication of ills, that for want of better nomenclature, has been denominated "female weakness."

And now comes the miraculous part of the story, just as she told it to the interviewer last night.

"I ran down to 118 pounds," she said, "and suffered tortures from those terrible headaches and from sleeplessness. My aunt persuaded me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I had used nearly every kind of 'prescription,' could get no relief from them, and hoped for none from these pills. But, to please auntie, I began to take them. From the first day I noticed a beneficial effect. The headaches grew less severe; my appetite gradually returned. I could sleep nights and began to get good and strong.

"I used to take one of them three times a day. In two months I weighed 138 pounds, and was entirely well, and have been well ever since. The winters at Verdi were very cold and, besides, I had heard so much about Southern California that I came to Los Angeles.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have helped me more than anything I have ever taken. I thank them for my health and ability to enjoy life. I am living at No. 809 Hope street, Los Angeles, and shall be only too glad to repeat what I have just said to anybody, either in person or by letter."

So spoke young and attractive Maud Lease, and no one who saw her big eyes snap as she said it could doubt the earnestness and sincerity of her statements.

And that is why we say the story of a miracle is floating through the air, although now the miracle has become an established fact.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuraliga, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 1000), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

That Banshee's Wail.

There is considerable discussion in the English papers about the wail of the banshee which was said to have been heard in East Kerry before the fatal hog moved. A correspondent writes that the late Archdeacon Whately, the celebrated archbishop's son, told him of a certain instance of the banshee's cry. The archdeacon said that he distinctly heard the wail while in an Irish country parish administering the holy communion to a dying man.

Watches were first called Nuremburg eggs. Some of them were 5 or 6 inches in diameter, as large as the small sized cheap clocks now exhibited in store windows. They were first made in 1477.

THE FAULTS AND FOLLIES OF THE AGE

Are numerous, but of the latter none is more ridiculous than the promiscuous and random use of laxative pills and other drastic cathartics. These wrench, convulse and weaken both the stomach and the bowels. If Hostetter's Stomach Bitters be used instead of these no remedies, the result is accomplished without pain and with great benefit to the bowels, the stomach and the liver. Use this remedy when constipation manifests itself, and thereby prevent it from becoming chronic.

Warner's Safe Cure
IN LARGE OR SMALL BOTTLES.

Owing to the many requests from its patrons, Warner's Safe Cure Co. have put on the market a smaller size bottle of Safe Cure which can now be obtained at all druggists at half the price of the large bottle.

Warner's Safe Cure is not only a scientific vegetable preparation and does all that is claimed for it, but it is the only Kidney and Liver medicine used by the best people of four continents. A medicine that bears the stamp of the world's approval, and maintains its position for a fifth of a century, must necessarily possess peculiar merit.

EUROPE'S FAIREST QUEEN.

Queen Natalie of Servia and How She Retains Her Beauty.

One of the fairest Queens in Europe is Queen Natalie, of Servia, and her greatest beauty is her neck.

The Queen takes frequent and regular exercise with a heavy pitcher on her head. The result of this is to straighten and strengthen her neck, and to give it the form which the highest standard of female beauty requires. Not only does the exercise add to present beauty, but it arrests the ravages which time makes more quickly in the female neck than in any other place.

She appears in the park surrounding her castle at about 8 o'clock each morning taking a brisk walk with her pitcher on her shapely head.

Queen Natalie has abundant black hair and a rich coloring. Her figure is very strong and erect, and her carriage is perfect, for her favorite exercise tends to develop the latter quality as well as to beautify the neck and shoulders. Her flesh has the firmness of marble.

Her head is placed on her shoulders after the manner of that of the Venus of Milo. There are no protruding bones, no wrinkles, no hollows, but neither is there any superfluous fatness.

The exercise to which Natalie owes so much of her charm is one which has been practiced by women of the poorer classes in many countries. Rachel, it may be remembered, met Jacob when she was going to the well with her pitcher. The women of the Oriental countries, of Greece, and of Italy, have always been accustomed to carry pitchers and burdens on their heads.

Spanish Soldiers.

One of the most pathetic, and even heartrending, things in the history of modern warfare has been the sending of thousands of very young peasants from the interior districts of Spain, who are in the deepest ignorance of the world's affairs, to combat in Cuba, not a visible enemy, but the terrible fever, which gives to but few of these unacclimated youths from the bracing highlands of Spain a fair chance of recovery. So little do they know of affairs that they are scarcely aware what they have come to the low coasts of the tropical West Indian island for before they are stricken down.

The simple-mindedness of the average peasant-soldier of Spain is illustrated by a story told in a Spanish journal. During the brief reign of the republic which followed the banishment of Queen Isabella in 1868, Don Carlos, a prince who claimed to be the rightful King of Spain under the old Salic law excluding women from the throne, made war against the republican government. His standard was raised in the northwest corner of the country, and almost all his soldiers were Basques—as the people of the ancient race who inhabit that part of Spain are called.

The city of Bilbao was defended by an army of the republic. One moonlight night two pickets of the hostile armies met outside the trenches. One, a soldier of the republic, wore the uniform which but lately had been royal; the other, the Carlist, had on his mountaineer's garb, surmounted by the white beretta, and carried an ancient flintlock rifle. At the ends of their beats the two "enemies"—neither of whom knew why he was fighting the other—came together.

"Good evening, comrade!" said the Carlist, politely.

"Good evening, comrade!" answered the other.

"Where do you live, comrade?"

"I live in a little village in Aragon, on the other side of Spain."

"Possible?"

"Aye. And where do you live?"

"On yonder mountain."

"And whom are you fighting for here?"

"For King Carlos. And for whom do you fight?"

"For the republic."

"For the republic? And who is the republic?"

"That I don't rightly know, comrade, but I think she is a new queen who lives in Madrid."

The two men were silent for a moment, looking amiably at each other, and then the Carlist said wistfully:

"Why doesn't our king marry her, I wonder, and have an end of wars!"

How to Cure Trouble.

Work is your true remedy. If misfortune hits you hard, hit you something else hard; go at something with a will. There is nothing like good, solid, absorbing, exhausting work to cure trouble. If you have met with losses, you do not want to lie awake thinking about them. You want sweet, calm, sound sleep, and to eat your dinner with appetite. But you cannot unless you work.

There are some great troubles that only time heals, and perhaps some that can never be healed at all; but all can be helped by the great panacea, work. Try it, you who are afflicted. It is not a patent medicine. It is an official remedy. All good physicians in regular standing prescribe it in cases of mental and moral disease. It operates kindly and well, leaving no disagreeable or ill effects. It will cure more complaints than any nostrum in the Materia Medica, and comes nearer to being a "cure-all" than any drug or compound of drugs in the market; and it will not sicken you if you do not take it sugar-coated.

Strange Funeral Customs.

"Localisms enter largely into death notices," remarked a funeral director. "In Pittsburg few people believe that a death notice is complete unless there is attached to it the line, 'Friends of the family,' etc. 'Widow of the late' is also very popular. In Philadelphia, where there is always lots of spare time, they run to 'poetry.' St. Louis people give the names of nearly all of the surviving relatives. In New Orleans there is an odd custom. There the death notices are tacked to telegraph poles in the business district where the deceased worked or was known and in the neighborhood of his home. They have printed blanks for this purpose, and the undertaker fills them in and has them nailed up."

Occasionally a woman earns a little money "of her own," but does a man ever have any money that is "his own" in the same sense?

Dade Harkins' Wedding

By VIOLA ROSEBORO.

Mrs. Harkins and some of her "kin" waited on the table and served a good supper of cold chicken, oysters ("coxe" oysters, if you know what they are), hot biscuit, coffee and cake. The hotel people tried now to give something of that jollity to the occasion that had characterized it in their previous imaginings, but they were under a saddening spell, and besides, not realizing that the wedding feast was to come so early, they had supped at home and were not hungry, and this in itself was depressing.

Harry soon lost the cheer the meeting glances had given him. Charley was bearing herself toward him with all the unconscious indifference she had worn for days past and was again devoting herself to palliating the sufferings of the lout of a bridegroom. Harry wondered that her father could consent to let her come to such a place. It was not a desirable thing for a young lady to meet such people, however it might do for others.

After the supper the preacher at once and finally disappeared, and, lo! a change immediately made itself felt on all sides. Everybody, while the "second table" was eating, was smiling, trying to talk. Soon all were moving about, and the affability of all who knew how to be affable was welcomed, even in a helpless way by the young Harkinses. Soon an old white headed negro with a fiddle slipped into the main room, seated himself in a corner and immediately occasioned much chuckling interchange of sly looks and humorous comment. All sections of the party, so to speak, sympathized in the point of view that induced these demonstrations, for it was certain that a number of church members of various degrees of social elevation would dance tonight and repent tomorrow, or at least when they were duly "disciplined" for their fall.

The dancing began, the old negro calling out the figures of the quadrilles and having a great deal to say about a "busy bee." That busy bee was an old acquaintance of every one present and helped, as it had done many a time before, to lighten a feeling of good fellowship all around, for Uncle Ned for a lifetime had withstood all arguments in favor of the use of the more usual term of vis-a-vis.

The young Harkinses were transformed, and with confident good will asked ladies to dance with them, ladies whose existence till but now they had ignored, and their dancing, by the way, though a trifle more energetic than is fashionable, was not bad.

For a time all went swimmingly, though the demoralizing features of social democracy grew upon Harry when he asked Charley to dance with him, only to be told that she had already promised more dances than she expected to perform.

A new quadrille was just forming when something happened—in fact, a good deal happened all at once, or so near it that the effect was the same, and now I sympathize with Carlyle in his despairing sense of the inadequacy of narration, which must proceed by sequences, to the task of portraying history, where things are always happening simultaneously. It is like trying to draw a house with one line.

Mrs. Peytee was standing up to dance with the bridegroom and was near the open door. As the inevitable preliminary squeaks issued from the fiddle a man, in her own phrase, "lunged" through the door, threw an arm violently around her waist and—was knocked down by the bridegroom. Mrs. Peytee was not the woman to throw away any cards fate in the course of the game put into her hands. She flew into the arms of the colonel, who had risen precipitately from his seat by the fire, crying piteously upon him, her Cousin Charles, for protection. One of the young Harkinses, not too sober himself, alas! recognized in the intoxicated intruder his long lost brother—in the Texas penitentiary he had been when last heard of—and, suddenly fired by that ardor of blood relationship always so easily awakened by those intruders known as "kin by marriage," he fell upon the bridegroom with blows. The brother rose and proceeded to take his own part as well, and in seven seconds from his entrance all the men in the place were in one wild melee, and the women were huddled together as far off as they could get, some screaming, some fainting, while Mrs. Harkins and Dade, stirred by a different spirit, loudly called upon Art and Bill and "you," Hank, to be ashamed of themselves, and to stop their "scandalous" behavior, interspersing their adjurations with severe comments on the male sex generally and individually and with some very sound abuse of the whisky, which was indeed at the bottom of the trouble. There was something comforting to the other women in their accustomed air through all this, but even their wrathful equanimity broke down when the sound of a pistol shot rang out. It was fired by the younger Harkins boy, who only aimed at the wall and was merely carrying out his youthful ideas of what was fitting.

A few minutes before the row began Charley had stepped out of doors with the other young man to look at the moon. She was so tired of him that she had then invented an errand to get rid of him for five minutes and had sent him to look in the buggy for a supposititious fan. Just as the shot was fired she appeared, white faced, in the doorway, much nearer the indistinguishable combatants and peacemakers than any of the other women:

"Go back, Miss Charley! For God's sake, go away!" Harry cried out, his voice saying a deal more than his words, but Charley didn't go back. She only dropped on her knees and screamed "Harry, Harry!" and Harry let go the Harkins he was holding and sprang toward her and lifted her away from that doorstep, and with that they both disappeared.

It is to be supposed that Charley had not noticed that her father was in quite as much danger as her lover. To tell the truth, of course both she and Harry had each whipped up the sense of the other's danger for their own dramatic purposes. I have no doubt but the colonel objected to Charley being shot, but he only snatched the pistol from the Harkins boy's hand and did not feel constrained to abandon the business in hand for her sake.

By the time she and Harry were seated on the wood pile—and it was a very short time—peace was restored and the unprofitable prodigal sent off to a private apartment in charge of his misguided brother, but Mrs. Peytee's agitation on this occasion, like Charley's own, was of an uncommonly enduring nature. She had too much astuteness to make a nuisance of herself, and as every one else straightened up and tried to pass over the late unpleasantness as the most natural thing in the world, preparatory to getting away as soon as possible, she, too, seemed to strive to appear at ease, but she kept near the colonel with an air of dependence upon his protection and a subtly conveyed sense of safety in his shadow which he found very touching. She showed a discriminating judgment, too, as to where to turn, that pleased him and raised his idea of her intelligence. Evidently she did not make the mistake of considering a little rheumatic stiffness as helpless old age. The colonel conceived the notion that it would be a pleasant thing to do the driving himself on the way home and to have Mrs. Peytee on the seat beside him. The reprehensible fact was that the bit of a tussle had stirred the colonel's blood and made him feel 15 years younger.

Harry, too, was considering the possibilities of the homeward trip. The other young man was a gentle, good natured young fellow. Harry resolved to make a confidant of him and beg him to surrender the buggy and Charley to her betrothed. The other young man immediately, blushingly and with the eagerness of embarrassment consented. He had no sooner done so than he was troubled for fear his surrender was unworthy a properly high spirited man. He knew he had heard of blood flowing about smaller matters, but he realized his own incapacity for living up to some high ideals and was helpless against his own human sense and sympathy.

Though quite in the dark about some trifles whose amazing potential importance we have seen, Mrs. Peytee confidently and correctly announced the engagement of his daughter to the colonel on the way home, and that announcement formed the point of departure for a conversation that was exactly to her mind.

THE END.

Genoa Marriage Brokers.

In Genoa there are regular marriage brokers, who have pocketbooks filled with the names of marriageable girls of the different classes, with notes of their figures, personal attractions, fortune and other circumstances. These brokers go about endeavoring to arrange connections in the same offhand mercantile manner which they would bring to bear upon a merchandise transaction, and when they succeed they get a commission of 2 or 3 per cent upon the portion, with such extras or bonuses as may be voluntarily bestowed by the party. Marriage at Genoa is thus oftentimes simply a matter of business calculation, generally settled by the parents or relations, who often draw up the contract before the parties have seen one another, and it is only when everything else is arranged and a few days previous to the marriage ceremony that the future husband is introduced to his partner for life. Should he find fault with her manners or appearance he may annul the contract on condition of defraying the brokerage and any other expenses incurred.—London Sun.

An Oddity.

Joubert, the French moralist whose "Thoughts" had great success, was so odd and original that a witty woman declared he gave her the idea of a soul which had met by chance with a body that it had to put up with and do with as well as it could.

His friend and editor, Chateaubriand, described him as an egotist who was always thinking of others. His ambition was to be perfectly calm, yet no one betrayed so much agitation as he.

In eating and in taking exercise he was as inconstant as a coquette. For several days he would live on milk; then for a week he would eat nothing but hash. On one day he would be jolted in a carriage a full trot over the roughest roads; on the next he would be drawn slowly through the smoothest alleys.

He had a library of mutilated books, for when he read he used to tear out of a book the pages that displeased him.—Youth's Companion.

White Handled Razors.

There are many barbers who will not own a white handled razor because of an old superstition that bad luck goes with it. A razor is to the barber what a locomotive is to the engineer, and there are more things to learn about it than one would suppose. For instance, there are razors that will cut certain qualities of hair better at certain seasons than at others. Climate and weather have a great deal to do with razors. Some will cut better in cold weather and some in hot. These are only a few of the causes that affect razors, and they and many more all tend to make the barber who does much work keep accumulating razors until he has all sorts to pick from.—Kansas City Journal.

Enjoyable.

"Do you really enjoy shooting?"

"Why, yes, of course," said the dear girl, who had lately bought a light rifle and a lovely pair of hunting bloomers. "Every time I manage to kill a rabbit or a poor little bird I have just the loveliest cry imaginable."—Indianapolis Journal.

NOW WITHOUT A RIVAL!

No Remedy to Compare with Paine's Celery Compound.

Read the Really Wonderful Experience of Rev. Dr. Bailey and His Good Wife, and the Indorsements of Other Eminent Divines.

Here is a lettter from the pastor of the most influential church in South Baltimore, that every truth-seeker should read carefully.

Every disheartened sick person and every man or woman who has lost faith in the remedies he or she has tried because none of them has done any good—every one who is sick ought to be cheered up and filled with new hope and determination by the letter written by Rev. William T. Bailey, pastor of the Curtis Bay Church, the most influential church in South Baltimore.

On March 31, 1896, the Baltimore Sun, under display headlines, published the following news of Rev. Mr. Bailey's affliction:

"Rev. Wm. T. Bailey, pastor of the Curtis Bay Baptist church, was paralyzed in the tongue while preaching Sunday night, and lost the power of speech. The congregation was at once dismissed, and Dr. —— was called. He said Mr. Bailey was suffering from a severe attack of nervous prostration caused by hard study and overwork, and that he must have rest and quiet."

The whole city was shocked. The papers soon began to record an improvement.

On April 13, 1896, the following open letter was addressed to the proprietors of Paine's celery compound:

South Baltimore, Md., April 13, 1896.
Messrs. Wells, Richardson & Co.,

Gentlemen:—I was taken very ill while preaching Easter Sunday night. My doctor could not help me, so I discharged him and began to use Paine's celery compound with crushing effect. I will not hesitate to say that it is the best medicine in the world.

I am, Fraternally,
William T. Bailey.

Later in the year the proprietors of this wonderful remedy received still another letter from Dr. Bailey, as follows:

Gentlemen:—I propose to do what I can to let people know of your Paine's celery compound, the medicine that has done me so much good. I shall, in my own way, in speaking of my rapid and great improvement, from the pulpit, give, as is justly due, tribute to Paine's celery compound. I married, six years ago, Miss Lillie B. Dunnavant, a lady well known in social life, the niece of Capt. Robert F. Lewis, U. S. Navy. During the whole six years she has been an invalid, suffering from hysteria, laughing, crying and screaming, so that she could be heard for squares. I have had a great deal of trouble and expense. Eighteen doctors have, first and last, attended her, and one bottle of Paine's celery compound has done her more good than all of the other medicine. She and I are together using Paine's celery compound, and I will with pleasure let you know the result. Fraternally,
William T. Bailey.

Baltimore, May 18, 1896.
Wells, Richardson & Co.,

Gentlemen:—It is impossible for me to express the emotions of my heart on the great good Mrs. Bailey and I have derived from the use of Paine's celery compound. I am a new man. We have taken together eight bottles, and I wish to continue its use. The people of my church are very kind to the poor, and I have given to some of the poor money with which to purchase the medicine. You may use my name if you wish and I will with pleasure answer all communications sent me. I believe the remedy is the best in the world.

Yours very truly,
William T. Bailey,
Pastor Curtis Bay Baptist Church.

A few weeks ago there was published a testimonial of the great virtue of Paine's celery compound from Rev. Charles L. Thompson, D.D., LL.D., the eminent Presbyterian preacher of New York City. Rev. Dr. Meek, editor of the Central Methodist, recently wrote an open letter, telling that Paine's celery compound had worked a remarkable cure in his case. And last month the great temperance evangelist, Francis Murphy, told the public how Paine's celery compound had been a blessing in his family.

These are few among thousands.

Every one knows conscientious, charitable persons who are too busy, more often too procrastinating, to save their health from going to pieces, and find it easier to help others than themselves. Such persons fill up the army of broken-down business men and sickly women.

Every one in this spring time needs to purify the blood and regulate the nerves. Carry home today—not by and by—a bottle of Paine's celery compound. Cure nervousness, neuralgia, and rheumatism this spring. You can now put your health on a sound basis by means of Paine's celery compound.

Charity should now begin at home. Attend to your own health and that of your family.

Paine's celery compound is within the reach of every family where there is a member afflicted by any stomach, liver or kidney trouble. It cures permanently and rapidly.

It must be distinguished from all other remedies.

TELEGRAPHING WITHOUT WIRES.

Hertzian Waves Are to Be Made to Do the Work.

To girdle the earth with telegraphy without the use of telegraph wires has been the dream of many an electrical inventor. As yet wireless telegraphy is in its infancy that will grow, however, and one day in the coming century the infant may become a giant that will bowl the world down the ringing grooves of change.

The latest scientist to plunge into the sea of wireless telegraphy is a young man named Marconi, who has recently evolved a system of telegraphy without wires, which depends not on electro magnetic but on electrostatic effects. That is to say, the new system is based on Hertzian waves, which have a vibration of not less than 250,000,000 a second. His theory, and some successful experiments he conducted, were recently discussed in Grit.

These Hertzian waves are to electricity what the X rays are to visual perception; but unlike the X ray, they do not die out easily. They simply take hold of one end and shake into waves of an electric stream so infinitesimally small and keen that it would take the ear of a fairy to hear that magnetic surf beating on the shares of cloudland.

These vibrations are projected through space in straight lines, but, like light, they are capable of reflection and refraction, and scientists have based their dreams of wireless telegraphy. With the fact that the Hertzian waves exhibit all the phenomena of light before them, the scientists have gone to work to construct instruments that will handle these waves as heliographs handle the rays of the sun.

But the great difficulty with Hertzian waves is that the waves will follow the curvature of the earth's surface. In this respect they are related to the X rays, which, in fact, seem to be a sort of illuminated electricity. The point to overcome in telegraphing long distances without wires is to obtain sufficient elevation to overlap the curvature of the earth's surface, and to reduce to a minimum the earth's absorption of the electric current.

If the terrific impulse of these Hertzian waves is not overestimated, a sort of mountain telegraph might be established from Washington territory to Nicaragua, and, with a few towers, even to the lower part of Chili and Patagonia.

This may be an exaggeration, but the fact remains that many scientists are so thoroughly convinced that the use of atmosphere and earth currents of electricity is practicable that they are working with might and main to bring about the desired end. In a recent interview Marconi said:

"I have long believed that instantaneous and simultaneous communication to all parts of the earth is possible by means of electric waves. I am becoming more convinced every day that such communication can be based upon scientific principles which can be controlled at will."

AS STATIONS FOR AERIAL TELEGRAPHY WITHOUT WIRES WOULD APPEAR.

Police Arrested Goats.

Three goats were led into the city court room at Yonkers, N. Y., by two policemen. Following them were their owners and three sympathizers who also own goats. Judge Kellogg was surprised and startled by the procession, and the excitement in the court room was increased when one of the long-haired animals began to bleat. The efforts of the officers to abate the noise were unavailing, and presently the other goats chimed in. They were finally taken to the police stables.

It was then learned that the men and goats were there on the complaint of a Mr. Gabriel, who lives on Park avenue. He was about to start for business on Wednesday morning when he was met at the door by a large "Billy." He opened his silk umbrella and the goat promptly butted a hole through it and landed Mr. Gabriel on his back. Then two other goats attacked him, and the cook had to come to the rescue with a rolling-pin. He then caused the arrest of the animals and their owners. The Judge dismissed them all with a warning.

ELECTRIC POWER CARRIAGES.

No Longer a Novelty in the Great Cities of America.

The horseless carriage—the kind operated by electric power—is no longer considered a freak. It is now in practical use. A few years from now it is possible that a horse will attract as much attention as did the first electric carriage. Even livery stable keepers admit that the horse must go. There is a motor vehicle which, on Sept. 11, 1896, made a five-mile run at the Narragansett Park races, in Providence, R. I., in eleven minutes and twenty-seven seconds. The average time per mile was two minutes seventeen seconds, and it covered the distance at the rate of a little more than twenty-six miles an hour, establishing a record for motor vehicles.

NEW ELECTRIC MOTOR CARRIAGE.

The handsome and surreys in use are fitted with two one and one-half horse power motors, both attached to the front axle, one to each wheel, and driven independently. The coupe is furnished with two two-horse power motors. After fifteen minutes' practice, say the manufacturers, a man who has never seen one before can operate one. They are fitted with pneumatic tires. The cost of the vehicles will not be much more than the price of a horse and an old-style carriage, and the charging of the batteries will be inexpensive.

Mechanism of the Human Body.

The human body is an epitome in Nature of all mechanics, all hydraulics, all architecture, all machinery of every kind. There are more than three hundred and ten mechanical movements known to mechanics to-day, and all of these are but modifications of those found in the human body. Here are found all the bars, levers, joints, pulleys, pumps, pipes, wheels and axles, ball and socket movements, beams, girders, trusses, buffers, arches, columns, cables and supports known to science. At every point man's best mechanical work can be shown to be but adaptations of processes of the human body, a revelation of first principles used in Nature.—Ladies' Home Journal.

TWO MOTHERS OF PRESIDENTS.

Ohio May Now Share in Virginia's Distinction.

With the inauguration of William McKinley as President of the United States Ohio may claim to take rank with Virginia as a "mother of Presidents." Virginia may still justly claim precedence, as the total time occupied in the presidency by her sons during the 108 years from 1789 to 1897 amounts to thirty-five years and eleven months, or almost exactly a third of the national existence of the republic—a record in point of time surpassing that of any other State. The four Presidents duly elected from Virginia were each re-elected. The fifth, Tyler, was a Vice Presidential accident, as were Millard Fillmore and Chester A. Arthur, of New York, and Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee. As regards Ohio's Presidents, the first, William Henry Harrison, was born in Virginia, and served but one month; President Hayes served but one term; Garfield served only a few months; and William McKinley, the last of the four, is but entering upon his first term.

The parallel between Virginia and Ohio is still further extended in the fact that six Presidents were born in each of the States, William Henry Harrison claiming Virginia as his birthplace, and Ohio being the native State of Grant and Benjamin Harrison, though Grant as a President is to be credited to Illinois and Harrison to Indiana. In point of eminence and enduring fame, indeed, Illinois is the only State that rivals Virginia as regards Presidents. Lincoln, the emancipator, and Grant, the commander, take a station second only to Washington in American history and in the affection and admiration of the American people, while Ohio's Presidents cannot be said to have left a marked impress upon the nation. What the fourth President from Ohio may add to the luster of the State as President it is yet too early to predict.

In another respect the inauguration of William McKinley is remarkable—in that he is the second President the famous Western reserve of Ohio has furnished the nation. William McKinley was born at Niles, Trumbull County, Ohio, whose chief town, Warren, is popularly called the capital of the Western reserve. James A. Garfield was also born in another county (Cuyahoga) of the Western reserve. A still more interesting coincidence is that the eighty-two veterans of the Twenty-third Ohio Volunteers who followed the carriage of the new President as he rode from the Capitol to the White House for the second time had the happiness of seeing a President chosen from their regiment, Hayes and McKinley both having belonged to this famous organization.

If it were asked why Virginia and Ohio have furnished nearly half the Presidents of the United States the answer would not be difficult. Virginia occupied a central position among the original thirteen States, just as Ohio for years has occupied a similar position in regard to the greater nation. There are many other reasons that may be adduced for the preference shown these two great commonwealths in the matter of the Presidency, but rank in population and central location were great general factors, especially as regards Ohio, and these elements are likely to be more and more prominent in the election of Presidents in the future. The question of "availability" is always a prominent one in President-making, and availability takes into consideration the prominence and location of the State, as well as the character and fitness of the man.

Mosquitoes.

In regions where these little torments become a burden, as they do in some localities which might be named, not a thousand miles away, it might be interesting to try a remedy which the Philadelphia Record publishes, its worth to be proved by experience: "The inhabitants of this down-the-river boathouse were nearly torn to pieces by mosquitoes every time they attempted to sleep in the house at night. Screens seemed to be of no avail, and it looked at one time as if the house would have to be abandoned. Finally, an old lady, who lived in the neighborhood, told them that she had not been troubled by mosquitoes for several years. Her remedy was astonishingly simple. She discarded all screens, and threw the windows wide open at night. Across the open space of the window she stretched a piece of red ribbon about two inches wide. 'A mosquito,' said she, 'cannot be induced to pass that ribbon. Why it is so I do not know, but I know the natives of India take this means of baffling the vicious mosquitoes. It works to perfection here also.' The man followed instructions, and now declares that there has not been a mosquito in the boathouse since the ribbon was stretched across the doors and windows."

The Doctrine of Atonement.

"For nineteen hundred years the chief point of controversy between faith and unbelief has been over the doctrine of the Atonement," writes Evangelist Dwight L. Moody in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Lying as it does at the very foundation of Christianity, it has been assailed in every age of the history of the church without avail, and remains to-day the most universally accepted teaching of our faith. Upon the finished work of Christ's Atonement the entire structure of Christianity rests.

"This truth has, perhaps, suffered as much from the misguided zeal of its friends as it has from the attacks of its enemies. The human theories which have been advanced in its defense have too often been at the expense of the Bible teaching regarding the character of God.

"It is a truth which we are to accept, but are not commanded to understand. Christianity is a faith, not a theory. Its truths are given by revelation and are not the result of speculation, the only infallible guide to which we may refer being 'What saith the Scriptures?' That the Bible contains passages that I do not understand is to me a strong proof of its Divine origin. If I could read the Bible as I do any other book, what would hinder my contributing toward writing a Bible? Thank God that in His word I find heights that I cannot reach, depths that I cannot fathom, breadths that I cannot measure! We cannot hope to study the revelation of God's word without finding what is superhuman, for, as Paul wrote to Timothy, 'Without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness.'"

The Library Corner

Miss Julia Magruder's new story is entitled "Dead Selves."

An important addition to the series of "Women of Colonial and Revolutionary Times" is in preparation for immediate publication. It is the long-expected volume on "Martha Washington" by Anne Hollingsworth Wharton.

It is now four years since the publication of a volume of short stories by Mr. Stockton. A new book, to be issued shortly, under the title of "A Story Teller's Pack," will contain a selection of his best work during that time. There will be nine stories in all.

Stanley Waterloo contributes to the Nickel Magazine an extremely interesting article on "The Great Chicago Conspiracy," in which he throws a good deal of new light on the historic attempt to free the 30,000 Confederate prisoners that were being guarded by less than 5,000 Union soldiers in the North in 1864.

The A. D. F. Randolph company has in preparation for early publication two litle volumes by Mrs. Ballington Booth. "Look Up and Hope" is specially prepared for distribution among the prisoners in the various prisons where Mrs. Booth has taken up her work. "Branded" is an account of Mrs. Booth's prison work.

"I hope I dislike personalities as much as the decent should," writes D. L. M. from Hull House, Chicago, to the Critic, "but I cannot help wondering if Mr. Kipling's critic in the Bookman—signing himself Y. Y.—is not an invalid? I never knew but two men feel that way about Rudyard, 'the devil and dearie,' and they were both sick men. They resented, almost hated him. It pleased me to explain it as a revolt of sex—the bitterness of an enforced effeminacy against an over-powering strength. Possibly they are not fair judges—but women do not think Kipling brutal. He simply gets to the bottom. He knows."

The Critic, speaking of "The Book of Wealth," the subscription work that sells for $2,500 a volume, gives an interesting description of the canvassers who sell these books: "There are not more than half a dozen men in the whole United States who can sell these expensive books, and they sell nothing else. Their season is short, but their harvest is large. They live in the most expensive hotels, and, instead of trudging wearily from door to door, drive about in their broughams, accompanied by a man servant who carries the book. The latter is not brought into the house until the possible purchaser expresses a wish to see it. One of the most successful of these agents told me recently that his season in New York did not begin until the horse show and that it was over by the first of June." Who would not be a book canvasser under such conditions?

Walking on Cracks.

Laurence Hutton, in St. Nicholas, is telling what boys did in old New York, under the title of "A Boy I Knew." He says: Johnny Robertson and The Boy had one great superstition—to wit, Cracks! For some now inexplicable reason they thought it unlucky to step on cracks; and they made daily and hourly spectacles of themselves in the streets by the eccentric irregularity of their gait. Now they would take long strides, like a pair of ostriches, and now short, quick steps, like a couple of robins; now they would hop on both feet, like a brace of sparrows; now they would walk on their heels, now on their toes; now with their toes turned in, now with their toes turned out at right angles, in a splay-footed way; now they would walk with their feet crossed, after the manner of the hands of very fancy, old-fashioned piano-players, skipping from base to treble—over cracks. The whole performance would have driven a sensitive drill-sergeant or ballet-master to distraction. And when they came to a brick sidewalk they would go all around the block to avoid it. They could cross Hudson street on the cobblestones with great effort, and in great danger of being run over; but they could not possibly travel upon a brick pavement and avoid the cracks. What would have happened to them if they did step on a crack they did not exactly know. But, for all that, they never stepped on cracks of their own free will.

Raising Asparagus from Seed.

A conveniently sized asparagus bed is about 6 feet wide with a path 2 feet wide on each side. This will require six rows 1 foot apart and a bed of that width 50 feet long will be ample for an ordinary family, requiring about 1 pound of seed. It will require about three years from the time of sowing until the bed is in full bearing, but once established is good for twenty years. It should be sown in drills one foot apart, and when the plants are 4 or 5 feet high they should be thinned out so that the plants will be 9 inches apart from each other in all the rows. Great care must be taken for the first year to keep down all weeds as soon as they appear, else they will choke up and destroy the young seedling asparagus. The deeper the soil and the greater abundance of manure that is used the greater will be the crop. Until the Palmetto was brought out, Conover's Colossal was the leading sort, and justly so; but Palmetto is not only much earlier, but is also a better yielder and is more even and regular in its growth, and must eventually supplant the old favorite. Average bunches, containing fifteen shoots, measure 13 inches round and weigh about 2 pounds. The Palmetto has now been planted in all parts of the country, and appears to be equally adapted to all sections.—Farm and Home.

THE PALMETTO.

For Care of Fowls.

Dark nests and convenience in gathering eggs from them characterize the plan shown herewith. The right of the cut represents the hallway, from which the nests are reached by lifting the hinged cover, as shown. The entrance to the nests is seen on the pen side of the partition, the dotted lines showing position of partition between the dark walk and the nests. A hinged cover, shown by dotted lines, gives access to this alleyway, so it can be swept out occasionally. Below the nests are grated openings into the hallway, so that the fowls can be fed and watered in the hall, thus affording no chance of spilling or soiling the food or water. With this arrangement nearly all the work of caring for the fowls can be done from the hallway—American Agriculturist.

Sowing Clover Seed on Snow.

It is well to sow the clover seed of winter grain as early as March, and on the snow, if possible. There need be no fear that seed thus sown will be washed away, unless in places where the land is not only overflowed but a strong current is running. The seed is heavy enough to sink in water, and it is pretty sure as it touches the moist earth to be imbedded in it and ready to grow. On spring grain, of course, this early seeding is not possible, for the surface must at least be dry enough to cultivate, and snow rarely falls after that time. We have, however, occasionally sown clover seed on snow over spring-sown grain, and neither the seeding nor the grain crop was injured by the snowfall.—American Cultivator.

Grain for Spring Feeding.

At present low prices for grain it is cheaper so far as nutritive value is concerned than any kind of forage. Part of this cheapness consists in the greater ease with which grain if fed in moderation can be digested. This is especially true of spring feeding. As the time approaches for turning stock out to grass they should have some kind of succulent food given with the grain ration. After winter's freezing and thawing, dry feed, whether hay or cornstalks, becomes dry and woody instead of having some of the juices it had when put up the previous fall.—Exchange.

Economy of Hornless Cows.

Not as much is said recently about dehorning cows that have been allowed to grow to maturity with these useless and dangerous appendages. We hope it is because dehorning the calves by applying caustic potash to the places where the horns start has made dehorning needless. There is not only freedom from danger to attendants from cows without horns, but there is much greater economy in stabling them. Without horns a number may be put together in loose stalls, with much greater freedom of movement than is possible when the head is confined in stanchions. Yet even when thus confined, the horn may easily put out an eye or seriously injure otherwise those who go near their heads.—Ex.

Milk with Dry Hands.

It is not a neat practice to wash the teats or to wet the hands before beginning milking, though it is often practised, and occasionally is recommended. Brushing off the loose dirt that adheres to teats and udder is all that is required. If hands are wet some of this dirt, full of germs, will be moistened, and adhere to them. More or less will fall into the milk pail. By carefully rubbing teats and udder with a dry cloth all the particles that will come loose by dry milking will be removed. It is very rare that milk is injured in this way while milking is being done. It is much more likely to occur by the odors of fresh excrement, either liquid or solid.

An Irrigating Plant.

The experiments that have been tried in introducing water freely below beds of growing plants have proved conclusively the value of this kind of watering. The cross section given herewith shows how one may readily try this experiment for himself this spring. Select the spot where a small bed is to be devoted to foliage or other plants, and sink an empty keg in the center just below the position of the coming roots. Fit an old piece of tin pipe, as suggested in the sketch, and your "irrigating plant" is ready for business! Not only can water be thus freely applied, but liquid manure also.

SUB-IRRIGATING PLANT.

The keg, it should be said, should not be one that will "hold water."—Orange Judd Farmer.

Gleanings.

Filthy drinking water kills more fowls than cholera, roup and half a dozen other diseases.

In feeding calves it is a good plan to add a small quantity of oil meal cooked to a jelly to the skim milk to take the place of fats.

For cream, milk should be set as quickly as possible after milking, and the temperature reduced at once to prevent the formation of fibrin. To this end all the improved methods tend.

A California man has a steaming process for killing insects on fruit trees. The process consists of heating the atmosphere about the trees to about 120 degrees, which does not injure the trees, but destroys insect life.

Give every tree that bore heavily last season a good top dressing of well rotted manure, out as far around at least as the branches extend. If the ground is in cultivation, fork this well down into the soil in next spring's cultivation.

Early potatoes may be secured by early planting of early varieties in deep, rich, warm soil, followed by thorough cultivation or mulching with straw. We scatter the straw about four inches deep just as the plants are coming through the ground.

A cockerel can be caponized at any age, but, as with all other animals, the best results are obtained by performing the operation when they are young. No definite time of the year can be designated, as it can be done in one month as well as another.

Sunflower seed is worth seventy-five cents a bushel, and there is considerable demand for it. At this price it should be a profitable crop. If an acre be sown as an adjunct to the poultry farm, and fed to the fowls a much greater return could be had from it.

Too much corn fed to the cow will not produce the best results in the milk pail. Even at present prices for corn, it will pay to sell some, if need be, in order to get some bran or middlings to feed to the cows in connection with corn meal, or with ground oats and corn, which is better.

A bill before the Legislature of Missouri provides for the utilizing of idle convicts in reclaiming swamp land in the southeastern part of the State. It is said that by digging ditches and building levees they can reclaim fully 3,000,000 acres—some say more.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR, ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 21 1897

The decision of the Supreme Court in favor of the Bell Telephone Company in the Berliner patent case, while sound in law and founded on plain principles of justice, is, nevertheless, objectionable inasmuch as it not only continues a monopoly which is adverse to public interests but offers large inducements for frauds in the Patent Office and tends to encourage the commission of them.

The Berliner invention, which covers an important part of the commercial telephone, was originally filed in the Patent Office in 1877, after which it passed into the possession of the Bell Company. For some reason the patent was not issued until 1881. A claim was made by a rival company that this patent should run from the time the application was originally made and not from the date when the patent was issued. The Bell Company, however, claimed a right to the monopoly for the full term allowed by law from the date of the issuing of the patent.

The Supreme Court in deciding the case declared there was no evidence of any corruption or undue influence used by Patent Office officials or employes to delay consideration of the Berliner application; second, that there was no testimony to show that the delay complained of was at the instance of the telephone company; and third, that since what delay did occur was caused by the Patent Office, the officers of the telephone company being in no way responsible, the patentee could not be made to suffer in any of his rights by reason of the delay.

The decision seems just inasmuch as an inventor ought not be made to lose anything by the delay of Government officials, but at the same time it will be seen that if patents of great importance can be held for years, thus securing a monopoly for nearly double the period which Congress intended to allow, there will be considerable pressure brought to bear on Patent Office officials hereafter to make these same delays in other important cases. This is a danger Congress should provide against at once and there ought to be no difficulty in doing it.

Senator White does not think the new tariff bill will increase the revenues. In an article written for the Examiner, under date of May 5th, he says:

"My opinion of the Dingley tariff bill was indicated when I voted in the finance committee against reporting it. The committee amendments are generally, but not always, in the direction of improvement. The Wilson bill is a better revenue producer than was the McKinley bill; the Dingley proposition would, if enacted, yield less than either of its predecessors. The Democratic members of the finance committee have not yet made full estimates as to the revenue capacity of the bill as suggested by the majority. The minority did not have the advantage of examining or seeing any of the amendments until yesterday. The adoption of these purely revenue features, which imposed 10 cents per pound on tea and an additional tax upon beer, indicates increased returns and announces a concession to tariff-for-revenue views which is instructive and suggestive. Unhappily the propositions are alloyed with the element of trust servility, which thoroughly inoculates the more important schedules and is particularly manifest in those sections which affect sugar.

"The profession of Republican leaders during the Wilson bill debate are shown to have been insincere. Secretary Sherman intimates in his recollections that the tariff of 1883 and that of 1890 were so impaired and localized by reason of the ability and sectional enthusiasm of the twelve ablest Senators from New England that both measures were nearly discredited. It is admitted, as I understand, by Republican members of the finance committee that the Dingley bill would not yield enough to meet the Government necessities.

"STEPHEN M. WHITE.

"United States Senator from California and member of the Finance Committee."

Greece declares that it will not ask for peace and will not humiliate itself before Turkey. It wants the "powers" to negotiate for a cessation of hostilities. We do not see what real difference there is in one's asking for mercy or getting some one else to ask for it in one's behalf. But, in the mean time the Turks are advancing on Domokos and executing some very pretty and effective strategy to General Smolenski's discomfiture, on the way. So, unless the Greeks shall sue for peace at Domokos they may have to do so at Athens. If the Greeks could not hold Pharsalia, far less can they hold Domokos. Every reverse diminishes the grip of an army.

In 1893 when the Democrats were trying to pass a tariff bill the Republicans said the Democratic free traders wanted to ruin the country. Now that the Republicans are in the saddle and a disposition is shown by Republican senators to follow the lines of the Wilson bill so as to get revenue very little fault is found by the men who were the loudest kickers then.

When the Wilson bill passed the House four years ago it was amended about seven hundred times in the senate. The Dingley bill is meeting with a worse fate. It has been patched up one thousand times by the Republican finance committee of the senate, and yet is not satisfactory.

The Irrigation Congress will be held July 14th at Salt Lake City with W. J. Bryan as President.

DECKER—STUTTZ.—At Independence, Cal., May 6, 1897, by A. V. Davidson, J. P.: John D. Decker and Ivy Alma Stuttz.

Henry Malone was in town Wednesday.

Butter is selling in town at 35 cents per roll.

Will Sanger came down from Alvord yesterday.

Thunder showers have been in order this week.

The Rickey cattle started for Long Valley last Monday.

P. H. Mack, Esq. returned home from San Francisco Monday.

Mrs. L. Wood is visiting at Big Pine with her niece, Mrs. L. Joseph.

The creeks are booming, and the roads are suffering in spots from overflow.

Richard Boland was in town Monday. He is working at Shepherd's canyon.

Mr. and Mrs. James Connor were down from Fish Springs on Wednesday.

Webb & Whitmore will start for Long Valley with their cattle in a day or two.

Rev. E. W. Van Deventer held religious services at Independence last Sunday.

Quite a shower of rain fell Wednesday afternoon, with a heavy storm in the mountains.

Trolinger expects to leave here to-morrow for the San Joaquin with about eighty head of mules.

F. Lawrence brought down a load of flour this week for A. W. Eibeshutz from the Kilpatrick mill at Bishop.

It wasn't hell that broke loose Wednesday. It was a gang of vaqueros with a band of mules going through town.

District Attorney Forbes went to Big Pine to-day, and expects to go from there to Bishop to-morrow.

J. D. Lewis Esq got back last Tuesday from a visit to San Francisco. He returned by the Southern route.

The Conklin Brothers arrived at Olancha with their sheep early in the week and will take them into Monache for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Densmore departed for Southern California Monday, where they will spend some weeks visiting relatives.

Hon. T. B. Rickey returned to Carson on last Tuesday's train, after spending a week at Independence looking after his cattle interests.

It is reported that Frank Fitzgerald has struck a valuable ore body at Modock and is taking about ten sacks a day of very high grade ore.

One of the most beautiful rose gardens in the county is now in full bloom at the residence of Miss Lena Thompson at Camp Independence.

Mrs. L. F. J. Wrinkle, accompanied by her son, Herbert, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Walter at Camp Independence during the week.

Ludwig Ehlen and Ludwig H. J. Ehlen made final proof on a homestead and timber-culture entry respectively at the local land office last Saturday.

A shock of earthquake was felt at Independence on Wednesday afternoon at 2:50 o'clock. Three tremors were perceptible, the second being the hardest.

It is reported that a rich strike of gold quartz has been made in Mazurka Canyon. The ledge is said to be five feet wide and prospects well with a horn spoon.

Allie McGee gathered up a band of cattle at Georges Creek early in the week and took them to Long Valley for the summer. He has the Rawson range leased.

A report came over the wires yesterday of a shooting scrape of some kind at Soda Springs. It was stated that Bob Stewart had shot somebody or had been shot at, but none of the particulars can be ascertained

W. J. Ryan left for San Francisco yesterday morning. He had been suffering for several days with bowel trouble and feared an attack of appendicitis. He expects to make a trip to Denver before returning here.

Mrs. Nettie Bulpit, Charley Olds and Willie Vaughn, all of Round Valley, were at Independence last Monday on land office business. Mrs. Bulpitt made final proof on a 40-acre desert entry, and Mr. Vaughn proved up on his desert claim.

Report has it that a mining sale of considerable importance is being negotiated at Benton with parties in San Francisco and Boston who propose to inaugurate extensive operations if they take the property.

Valuable Mines.

Sheriff Given and County Clerk Hession got back last Saturday from a trip to Panamint, and both agree that there is an excellent prospect for a good mining camp there. The most extensive workings they saw were at the World Beater mine, on the west slope of the Panamint range and about four miles south of the old town of Panamint. The ledge crops out on top of a hill and runs down with the hill. A tunnel ninety feet long taps the ledge at a depth of one hundred and sixty feet. From the tunnel a drift has been run one hundred feet one way and fifty feet in the opposite direction along the hanging wall. The ledge has been cross-cut at the end of each drift and is found to average fifteen feet in width. The ore is white quartz, free-milling and is said to go forty dollars per ton. At present ore is being taken from an open cut on the surface and is being worked in a Bryan mill with good results. Power is supplied with a gasoline engine. There is an unlimited supply of wood on the ground for fuel and sufficient water to run a large stamp mill. The mine is one of a group owned by the Montgomery Brothers, who also own some twenty mines in the district. L. F. J. Wrinkle has been engaged in surveying these mines as a basis for an application for patents. The entire country was prospected twenty years ago, and in one of the old dug-outs was found an almanac of 1868. The old time prospector, however, was looking for silver and paid no attention to the large and apparently barren ledges and dykes of quartz which run through the country. There are many more mines outside of those owned by the Montgomery Brothers, and upon which development work is being done. The Cash Customer and other mines owned by Chas. Anthony are highly spoken of. Mining men say that while the ledges in the Anthony mines are not quite so wide as in the World Beater, the ore is far richer. Mr. Given states that nearly all of the people in that section of country are from the southern part of the State and obtain their supplies from Los Angeles. That it will require an effort on our part to divert their trade in our direction, and that it is certain to be very valuable is evident. Farm produce of all kinds is in demand, and a considerable amount of hay and grain is consumed by teams hauling freight. As this is only the beginning, it is certainly worth looking into. Frank Fitzgerald has struck a good body of ore at Modock, and two men are taking out ten sacks of ore a day. The ore is high-grade silver-lead. The body of ore struck by J. J. Gunn some time in the Minnietta continues to hold out. It goes about six hundred ounces per ton. At the Lane mine at Darwin a depth of six hundred feet has been attained, and additional hoisting apparatus will be needed before they can go much deeper. The prospects of Southern Inyo in its palmiest days never looked so bright as at present.

Continues To Ship Bullion.

Bar No. 34, valued at about $1,000 was shipped from the Reward mill this week. A new rock-breaker has just been put into place which greatly facilitates the work of handling the ore in the mill. A new frue-vanner concentrator has been added, making three now in operation. Thirty-two men are now on the pay-roll. Development work is being actively pushed forward, and it is intended to add ten more stamps to the mill at an early date.

Scale Destroyer

Prof. Cook gives the following formula for making a kerosene emulsion which will destroy red and black scale: Take two quarts of water, one-eighth of a pound of soap (any soap will do); one quart of kerosene. Boil water and soap until the soap is dissolved, then remove from fire, add the kerosene and pump through spray pump back into reservoir to mix thoroughly. Add 12 to 15 quarts of water and it is ready for use. Large quantities in like proportions. It is to be hoped that all horticulturists troubled with scale will try the formula. Care must be exercised to emulsify properly, otherwise the emulsion will be useless. Watch for the hatching of the scale and apply the emulsion immediately thereafter. This will rid your orchard from scale pests.

F. D. Bentley Esq. arrived at Independence on Tuesday from Los Angeles. Mr. Bentley is looking after the legal interests of parties claiming title to the Wibbelt mine.

R. S. Gibbs of Los Angeles is tuning pianos here this week. The gentleman is well recommended, and it is evident from the sound of a piano after his tuning that he understands his business.

Jas. E. Parker returned to Panamint last Monday, after a few days visit with his family in town. He confirms the good reports that have been coming in from Panamint. He states that there is no question about the value and extent of mining properties there.

George D. Roberts and Professor Maynard, the mining men, returned from Silver Peak Thursday, after a ten days examination of the mines. The gentlemen are reticent as to what their report will be, but it is known that they are favorably impressed with the property.—Hawthorne Bulletin.

The Carson News says that George Mills, formerly paymaster of the V. & T. and C. & C. roads, is about to leave his home in Carson for Costa Rica, Central America, where a position of responsibility has been offered him. He will go down to investigate the position, prepared to remain. Mr. Mills has two brothers in Costa Rica who are extensive cotton planters.

The Richest Strike of All.

A special correspondent of the Los Angeles Express says:

Last Friday a ripple of excitement passed over the towns of Johannesburg and Randsburg, when it was noised about that a rich strike had been made on the Alameda claim. By Saturday the ripple had grown into a wave, when it was learned that it was the richest strike ever made in the Rand mining district. This claim is situated about a mile and a half from Randsburg and less than a quarter of a mile from Johannesburg, and is an extension of the Val Verde.

About two months ago the Alameda was bonded by the Ashford Brothers, owners of the King Soloman mines to Messrs. McEwen, McConnell and McAllister for $3,500. A few days ago the latter named gentlemen contracted with Arthur Finch to sink a 6x8 shaft 100 feet deep, 80 per cent of the ore found to be his pay for the same. Mr. Finch was to use his own judgment in choosing the particular part of the claim on which to sink this shaft. Friday morning he prospected the bottom part of the hill, but failed to find anything; In the afternoon he went to work at the top of the hill, and inside of an hour had uncovered a ledge four feet wide with a pay streak two feet wide running through it. Of the ore sampled none ran less than $500 to the ton, and some high as $5000. On Saturday forty-three sacks of ore weighing 3175 pounds were taken out of a space 4x2 feet by 3 feet deep and were sent to the sampling works at Johannesburg. Considerable soil was mixed with the ore, and therefore the run at the sampler will not be a fair test of its value, although an assay of the soil alone returned $278 per ton.

The ore is a mixed quartz and schist, and is heavily rusted with iron; but little of it shows free gold, but when it is ground in the mortar and submitted to a bath in the "pan", the rust disappears and the gold is as bright as a brand-new twenty. It is extremely soft and looks more like that found in placer claims. Pieces were secured from the "hornings" as large as a grain of wheat, although they did not show in the rock.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following deeds were filed for record during the week ending May 20, 1897:

Davidson to Woodin—Borax claims at Salt Wells Valley; consideration $5.

Anger to Rickey—160 acres land at Camp Independence; consideration $200

Built On A Mining Claim.

CARSON, Nev., May 12.—The case of Patrick Bonner et al. vs. Meikle et al., involving a part of the townsite of Delamar, began in the United States court today. The defendants in the case located the Naiad Queen claim and during the gold excitement people rushed in and built a town over the mining claim. Other claims were located about the Queen claim and purchased by Delamar. The defendants are endeavoring to secure a patent and the plaintiffs have instituted proceedings to prevent it on the ground that there is no mineral in the Queen claim. Over five hundred property owners are interested. If the located claim can be patented the property thereon will belong to the patentees.

Judge Rives of Salt Lake represents the company and has about ten mining experts here to te testify, and Judge Powers, counsel for the plaintiffs, has a number of others. A number of settlers are also present and will testify in their own behalf. The loss of the case will be a serious one to them, as most of them purchased the land for building at high figures from people who had no right to sell.

Sugar Beet Culture.

What effect upon a locality will the growing of sugar beets have upon general agriculture in that region, is a question which very naturally arises under the present agitation of the sugar beet question. Although it might be an advantage to have a material reduction in the agricultural products in some localities, sugar-beet growing need not necessarily bring about such reduction. According to a statement made in a bulletin upon the sugar beet, just issued by the Arizona Agricultural Experiment Station, the development of the sugar beet industry in Germany has in no way interfered with agricultural development in other lines, for it is shown that in those communities whese the sugar beet is grown, exports of other agricultural products have gradually increased instead of being diminished by reason of the sugar beet growing. All the waste materials in the manufacture of sugar are now being utilized, the pulp being found especially useful as a food for dairy cows and for fattening beef animals.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. Va., and one of the most widely known men in the State, was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June, 1894, Evans, then salesman for the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size, and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Hundreds of thousands have been induced to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy by reading what it has done for others, and having tested its merits for themselves are to-day its warmest friends. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

HIS BACK UP.

When Noah blew his horn, the camel humped himself to get aboard, and by a curious freak he stayed humped all his life. Lumbago or lame back humps a man's back simply because he cannot straighten himself on account of the stiffness and soreness accompanying the ailment. Nature helped the camel to his hump for a special purpose. Nature will help a man to get rid of his hump right off if he uses St. Jacobs Oil, because the character of the trouble is such that it needs just such a remedy to warm, soften and straighten out the contracted muscles. From the time of Noah down to the present time men have had lame backs, but only since the introduction of St. Jacobs Oil has the best cure for it been known. Lumbago really disables, but St. Jacobs Oil enables one to attend to business without loss of time.

CHEAP IRRIGATION.

The Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, Cal., the largest builders of gas, gasoline and oil engines on the Coast, are making extensive preparations for the season's business.

They are filling several orders for large irrigating plants and as this line of their business increases each season, it is safe to say the farmers throughout the State are appreciating the advantages of irrigation with water pumped by this cheap power.

The Hercules Works are at present building an 80 H. P. engine for Geo. F. Packer, Colusa, which will raise 600 gallons per minute from the river and distribute it over his land. This will be the largest gasoline pumping plant in existence.

Safe Cure

Cancer Of the Breast.

Mr. A. H. Crausby, of 158 Kerr St., Memphis, Tenn., says that his wife paid no attention to a small lump which appeared in her breast, but it soon developed into a cancer of the worst type, and notwithstanding the treatment of the best physicians, it continued to spread and grow rapidly, eating two holes in her breast. The doctors soon pronounced her incurable. A celebrated New York specialist then treated her, but she continued to grow worse and when informed that both her aunt and grandmother had died from cancer he gave the case up as hopeless.

Someone then recommended S.S.S. and though little hope remained, she begun it, and an improvement was noticed. The cancer commenced to heal and when she had taken several bottles it disappeared entirely, and although several years have elapsed, not a sign of the disease has ever returned.

THE UMBRELLA.

It Has Been Known and Used For Thousands of Years.

Possibly many of you suppose that the umbrella is a modern invention, but it is not. Both as an emblem of rank and as a protection from sun and rain it is of very ancient origin. Though the materials used in the manufacture have been constantly changing, the general construction of the frame has been changed but little in thousands of years.

Egyptian and Ninevite sculptures of the earliest dates have many representations of the umbrella, but it is invariably in connection with royalty. It was always held over the head of a monarch when he rode in his chariot and at his great open air feasts. In some of the Hindoo sculptures Vishnu is represented carrying an umbrella when going on a visit to the infernal regions.

We find frequent references to the umbrella in the Greek poets, for its use was quite fashionable among women of high rank in Greece. In the middle ages it was an emblem of rank in the church. Umbrellas were carried over cardinals and bishops in solemn processions, and all of the large cathedrals owned one or more umbrellas that were kept for use on such occasions.

The Chinese adopted the umbrella at a very early period in their history, and for many centuries were the only people that did not confine its use to the king and princes of the blood. However, they permitted only men of wealth and high position to carry them. The common people protected themselves from the elements by making their hats broad and umbrella shaped.

From the time that they established their empire the Japanese have made much use of the umbrella. It is also used throughout India, but it is a mark of rank in Burma and Siam. One of the titles of the king of Burma is Lord of the Twenty-four Umbrellas. He uses white silk umbrellas, and no other person is permitted to use a white one. The princes of the blood each have, as a mark of distinction, two gilt umbrellas, with handles 10 or 15 feet in length. The other officers of the state have but one.

From early drawings it seems probable that the umbrella was introduced into Europe in the fourteenth century, but it did not come into general use until about 1700.—Philadelphia Press.

A New Point In Insurance.

The ingenuity of some insurance companies in devising ways and means for evading responsibility is equaled by nothing on earth. A claim was recently made against an accident insurance company for indemnity by a physician who had met with an injury in a very peculiar fashion. He had been ill as the result of an accident received some time previous, but was partly recovered. While driving he was seized with a spasm, and great exhaustion overcame him. He stopped his horse and proceeded to administer a hypodermic injection of some powerful stimulant to which he resorted in such emergencies. Just as he was about to insert the needle his horse started. The needle was driven deep into the flesh, inflicting a severe and painful injury. He sued for indemnity, he being disabled for 22 weeks. The judge dismissed the complaint on the ground that the injury was not caused through external violent and accidental means in the intent and purpose of the policy. This decision will strike the average thinking individual as somewhat peculiar. If a mishap due to the sudden starting of a horse is not an accident, it might be interesting to know how the word could be defined.—New York Ledger

Women and Insurance.

Only about eight or nine of the life insurance companies of the country insure women at the same rates as men. A considerably larger number insure women, but charge them an additional $5 per $1,000, and still more even do not insure women at all. It is the opinion of those qualified to speak that the companies charging the excess rate are not justified in doing so and that the practice will not long be continued. The mortality rate experienced among its women insurers by one well known company has been about 80 per cent of what was expected, and it has insured several women for the full amount it will issue on any one life—that is, $50,000. The heretofore unfavorable attitude of insurance companies toward women has been due undoubtedly to the fact that few if any women had an insurable interest, but that day has passed. As the avenues of occupations have widened thousands of women today are the sole support of children or parents, and those thus dependent on them need the protection of insurance as much as if the family breadwinner were a man.

REFORMS NEED MORE THAN A DAY

To bring them about, and are always more complete and lasting when they proceed with steady regularity to a consummation. Few of the observant among us can have failed to notice that permanently healthful changes in the human system are not wrought by abrupt and violent means, and that those are the most salutary medicines which are progressive. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the chief of these. Dyspepsia, a disease of obstinate character, is obliterated by it.

All ailments arising from a disordered stomach, torpid liver and constipated bowels are quickly cured by using Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters.

"Bixby wasn't a sailor long." "No?" "No; the minute he got seasick he threw up his job."

Malaria and Grip positively cured, also all other Medical and Surgical cases guaranteed a cure or no charge. Reasonable terms; call or write; confidential. DR. CRAIG & CO., Medical Institute, 1346 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters searches out all impurities and expels them harmlessly through the natural channels from the system.

$100 REWARD. $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

The Great Brown-Pericord Motor

By CONAN DOYLE.

[Copyright, 1895, by the Author.]

It was a cold, foggy, dreary evening in May. Along the Strand blurred patches of light marked the position of the lamps. The flaring shop windows flickered vaguely with steamy brightness through the thick and heavy atmosphere.

The high lines of houses which lead down to the embankment were all dark and deserted or illuminated only by the glimmering lamp of the caretaker. At one point, however, there shone out from three windows upon the second floor a rich flood of light, which broke the somber monotony of the terrace. Passengers glanced up curiously and drew each other's attention to the ruddy glare, for it marked the chambers of Francis Pericord, the inventor and electrical engineer. Long into the watches of the night the gleam of his lamps bore witness to the untiring energy and restless industry which were rapidly carrying him to the first rank in his profession.

Within the chamber there sat two men. The one was Pericord himself, hawk faced and angular, with the black hair and brisk bearing which spoke of his Celtic origin. The other, thick, sturdy, and blue eyed, was Jeremy Brown, the well known mechanician. They had been partners in many an invention, in which the creative genius of the one had been aided by the practical abilities of the other. It was a question among their friends as to which was the better man.

It was no chance visit which had brought Brown into Pericord's workshop at so late an hour. Business was to be done—business which was to decide the failure or success of months of work, and which might affect their whole careers. Between them lay a long brown table, stained and corroded by strong acids and littered with giant carboys, Faure's accumulators, voltaic piles, coils of wire and great blocks of nonconducting porcelain. In the midst of all this lumber there stood a singular whizzing, whirring machine, upon which the eyes of both partners were riveted.

A small, square metal receptacle was connected by numerous wires to a broad steel girdle, furnished on either side with two powerful projecting joints. The girdle was motionless, but the joints, with the short arms attached to them, flashed round every few seconds, with a pause between each rhythmic turn. The power which moved them came evidently from the metal box. A subtle odor of ozone was in the air.

"How about the phlanges, Brown?" asked the inventor.

"They were too large to bring. They are seven feet by three. There is power enough there to work them, however. I will answer for that."

"Aluminium with an alloy of copper?"

"Yes."

"See how beautifully it works!" Pericord stretched out a thin, nervous hand and pressed a button upon the machine. The joints revolved more slowly and came presently to a dead stop. Again he touched a spring, and the arms shivered and woke up again into their crisp metallic life. "The experimenter need not exert his muscular powers," he remarked. "He has only to be passive and use his intelligence."

"Thanks to my motor," said Brown.

"Our motor," the other broke in sharply.

"Oh, of course," said his colleague impatiently. "The motor which you thought of, and which I reduced to practice—call it what you like."

"I call it the Brown Pericord motor," cried the inventor, with an angry flash in his dark eyes. "You worked out the details, but the abstract thought is mine, and mine alone."

"An abstract thought won't turn an engine," said Brown doggedly.

"That was why I took you into partnership," the other retorted, drumming nervously with his fingers upon the table. "I invent. You build. It is a fair division of labor."

Brown pursed up his lips, as though by no means satisfied upon the point. Seeing, however, that further argument was useless, he turned his attention to the machine, which was shivering and rocking with each swing of its arms as though a very little more would send it skimming from the table.

"It acts!" he cried. "The Brown Pericord motor acts!"

"Is it not splendid?" cried Pericord.

"It is satisfactory," said the more phlegmatic Anglo-Saxon.

"There's immortality in it!"

"There's money in it!"

"Our names will go down with Montgolfier's.

"With Rothschild's, I hope."

"No, no, Brown. You take too material a view," cried the inventor, raising his gleaming eyes from the machine to his companion. "Our fortunes are a mere detail. Money is a thing which every heavy witted merchant in the country shares with us. My hopes rise to something higher than that. Our true reward will come in the gratitude and good will of the human race."

Brown shrugged his shoulders. "You may have my share of that," he said. "I am a practical man. We must test our invention."

"Where can we do it?"

"That is what I wanted to speak about. It must be absolutely secret. If we had private grounds of our own, it would be an easy matter, but there is no privacy in London."

"We must take it into the country."

"I have a suggestion to offer," said Brown. "My brother has a place in Sussex on the highland near Beachy head. There is, I remember, a large and lofty barn near the house. Will is in Scotland, but the key is always at my disposal. Why not take the machine down tomorrow and test it in the barn?"

"Nothing could be better."

"There is a train to Eastbourne at 1."

"I shall be at the station."

"Bring the gear with you, and I shall bring the phlanges," said the mechanician, rising. "Tomorrow will prove whether we have been following a shadow or whether fortune is at our feet. One o'clock, at the Victoria." He walked swiftly down the stair and was quickly reabsorbed into the flood of comfortless, clammy humanity which ebbed and flowed along the Strand.

* * * * * *

The morning was bright and springlike. A pale blue sky arched over London with a few gauzy white clouds drifting lazily across it. At 11 o'clock Brown might have been seen entering the patent office with a great roll of parchment diagrams and plans under his arm. At 12 he emerged again, smiling, and opening his pocketbook he packed away very carefully a small slip of official blue paper. At five minutes to 1 his cab rolled into Victoria station. Two giant canvas covered parcels like enormous kites were handed down by the cabman from the top and consigned to the care of a guard. On the platform Pericord was pacing up and down, with long eager step and swinging arms, a tinge of pink upon his sunken and sallow cheeks.

"All right?" he asked.

Brown pointed in answer to his baggage.

"I have the motor and the girdle already packed away in the guard's van. Be careful, guard, for it is delicate machinery of great value. So. Now we can start with an easy conscience."

At Eastbourne the precious motor was carried to a four wheeler and the great phlanges hoisted on the top. A long drive took them to the house where the keys were kept, whence they set off across the barren downs. The building which was their destination was a commonplace whitewashed structure, with straggling stables and outhouses, standing in a grassy hollow which sloped down from the edge of the chalk cliffs. It was a cheerless house even when in use, but now, with its smokeless chimneys and shuttered windows, it looked doubly dreary. The owner had planted a grove of young larches and firs around it, but the sweeping spray had blighted them, and they hung their withered heads in melancholy groups. It was a gloomy and forbidding spot.

But the inventors were in no mood to be moved by such trifles. The lonelier the place, the more fitted for their purpose. With the help of the cabman they carried their packages down the footpath and laid them in the darkened dining room. The sun was setting as the distant clatter of wheels told them that they were finally alone.

Pericord had thrown open the shutters, and the mellow evening light streamed in through the discolored windows. Brown drew a knife from his pocket and cut the pack thread with which the canvas was secured. As the brown covering fell away it disclosed two great yellow metal fans. These he leaned carefully against the wall. The girdle, the connecting bands and the motor were then in turn unpacked. It was dark before all was set out in order. A lamp was lit, and by its light the two men continued to tighten screws, clinch rivets and make the last preparations for their experiment.

"That finishes it," said Brown at last, stepping back and surveying the machine.

(To Be Continued.)

Salaries Earned by Successful Buyers.

A good buyer who year after year increases his business and the reputation of his department, who leaves for the semiannual inventory a clean and desirable stock—one who, in fact, has the genius of money making—is paid a salary in the big houses of from $5,000 to $10,000 and often a percentage on the yearly increase of his sales. In some of the largest departments a number of the most capable buyers thus receive as much as $30,000 a year and are regarded as cheap at that, a fact which can be readily understood when it is remembered that in a single department of a great shop selling, say, $1,000,000 worth of goods a year, a difference of 5 per cent in the profits, which may be the result of a good manager as distinguished from a mediocre one, amounts to $50,000. On the other hand, in the lower class stores buyers in many of the departments are paid as low as $25 a week, with no percentage. If the large incomes are the great exception, it is also to be said that the opportunities are more numerous than the men with the ability to take advantage of them.—"The Department Store," by Samuel Hopkins Adams, in Scribner's.

Two Horses.

The editor of the New York Christian Advocate learned not long since from a coachman that horses are not unlike human beings. He writes:

Riding in a friend's carriage one day, we noticed that the coachman made constant efforts to restrain one of the horses and to hasten the other. As the pair were handsome and perfectly mated, we said, "What is the difference between these horses, that you are constantly touching up one and holding in the other?"

Said he: "The one that I whip cannot possibly overwork himself. I will not say that he is lazy, but he is so made that he never can and never will do himself any damage. It would be impossible to whip him so hard that he would hurt himself. The other can trot a mile in less than 2:25, and he would trot from the love of it until he dropped dead. Hot or cold, he does his best."

Didn't Locate It.

Dr. H. F. Fisk, principal of the academy of the Northwestern university, is an exact man, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. He has made it a rule that for all absences from recitations his students shall write out reasons in full why they were away and what recitations were missed. One day Dr. Fisk received a note as follows:

"On account of the earache, headache, stomach ache and cramps I was unable to attend algebra at 8 a. m., grammar at 10 a. m. and English at 3 p. m."

Dr. Fisk excused the student, but at the same time took occasion to rebuke him for not stating in his letter where he had cramps.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Purpose in Life.—Have a purpose. Don't drift. All other things being equal, the young man who has a firm purpose to be the best and do the best will come out ahead in the long run.—Rev. Dr. Gumbart, Baptist, Boston, Mass.

Money Will Save Souls.—Money has an evangelizing power in the hands of Christians as surely as it has a commercial value. Money must be laid at the feet of Jesus Christ for the salvation of a world.—Rev. W. G. Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Value of the Church.—Half the value of the country church is its special value. It is where the families of the countryside meet and shake hands and compare notes. I used to like to see them assemble on foot, on horseback and in lumber wagons. The church was a meeting house—the country club house.—Rev. M. W. Reed, Independent, Denver, Colo.

The Song of Songs.—I raise my voice here to thank God for the song of songs that teaches us that all the allurements of courts, all the wealth of the world, are nothing compared with sweet, homely love.—Rev. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Labor Problem.—There will be no relief from growing poverty and distress until millions now shut away get back to the soil and become producers. The solution of the labor problem lies at the end of this road.—Rev. A. J. Wells, Unitarian, San Francisco, Cal.

Fighting Against Infidelity.—All true Christians are one in feelings, one in purpose and plans, and one in desires, and present a solid bulwark of resistance when the doctrine of redemption is assailed by an infidel battery.—Rev. Edward McHugh, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Then and Now.—Jesus is a more real and greater personage in the nineteenth century than he was in the first. In the first he was rejected, despised, crucified. In the nineteenth he is revered, accepted, crowned.—Rev. J. F. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Heaven.—The real heaven is a state and not a place. The heavenly character conditions the heavenly inheritance. Love to God and love to men are the essential elements of this character. Earth is a hell below without this love, and heaven would also be a hell if it were wanting.—Bishop Fallows, Episcopalian, Chicago, Ill.

The God Idea.—The god idea arose among the Hebrews, grew among the Israelites and developed in greater grandeur among the Jews. It passed through all the stages of a family god, a tribal god, a national god, a God greater than all the gods, until it evolved into the conception of a God who is the universal Lord.—Rabbi J. L. Levy, Hebrew, Philadelphia, Pa.

God's Message.—The Bible contains the promise of its own entire solution and explanation. The message of the master is that we shall seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and then all these things—understanding, knowledge, apprehension, appreciation of the divine—will be added unto us.—William J. Cozens, Salvationist, Boston, Mass.

Preaching.—To go into the world and preach the Gospel to every people is a command that has been delivered to us, and the pastor's great duty is to carry out that command. Let him carry that Gospel to his own people, in a straightforward, sincere and honest way, and fit them for its still broader dissemination.—Rev. F. B. Meyer, Evangelist, New York City.

The Religion of Christ.—Christianity is the religion of Christ, founded by him and based upon the teachings given by him and his inspired followers. These teachings make plain his claim to be divine—the God man—and declare unequivocally that salvation is obtained through his sacrifice of himself for the sins of the world.—Rev. Roderick Terry, Reformed, New York City.

Contempt of Court.

"Ten dollars," said the magistrate.

"But, your honor," said the prisoner, "I protest against this fine. I have the right to make a defense against the charge."

"But you have already pleaded guilty," said the magistrate.

"I beg your honor's pardon. I denied the charge in the plainest terms."

"Young man," said the magistrate sternly, "I want to call your attention to the fact that the court understands the English language. You have pleaded guilty in unmistakable words. The plaintiff charges you with assault and battery. It is clearly evident that he has been assaulted and battered. According to your statement he approached you on the street and used abusive language toward you. Then you say that you 'didn't do a thing to him.' If the court understands the language spoken by seventy millions of people, you immediately wiped up the earth with him. The fine stands, and any further reflection upon the court's knowledge of English will cost you ten more."

Small for Her.

Very Stout Lady (watching the lions fed)—'Pears to me, mister, that ain't a very big piece o' meat for sech an animal.

Attendant (with the most stupendous show of politeness)—I s'pose it does seem like a little meat to you, ma'am, but it's enough for the lion.—Household Words.

For Herself Alone.

She—Do you love me for myself alone, dearest?

He—Of course I do. You don't suppose I want your mother about all the time, do you?—Judy.

Negro Physicians Organize.

Negro physicians have organized State medical associations in six States of the South—the two Carolinas, Georgia, Tennessee, Texas, and Florida.

A girl may thrive on love, but by the time a man has been engaged six weeks he begins to look as if he were eating quail on a wager.

NEILL OF ARKANSAS.

Another U. S. Congressman Indorses Paine's Celery Compound.

Within the past year, among the thousands of hearty testimonials to the wonderful curative powers of Paine's celery compound that have been received by Wells, Richardson & Company—among the thousands of grateful letters received from every state and town in the country, there have come no less than six hearty indorsements from members of the national house of representatives.

All were willing that their experience should be published, believing rightly that they might thus do good to others.

In these columns have already been published the letters received from Congressmen Meredith, Bell, Grout and Powers.

Now comes a letter from Congressman Robert Neill of Arkansas, as follows:

"My home is at Batesville, Ark. During the last spring and summer my eldest daughter, then 17 years of age, was in very poor health, suffering from general debility, nervous prostration and frequent slight fevers. She had the best medical attention, but apparently with little benefit. In the latter part of September last, while still feeble, she began the use of Paine's celery compound, and improved in health continuously. In three months she had fully recovered, and is now in perfect health. I am bound to think the remedy is an excellent one, and do not hesitate to recommend it to the suffering."

To postpone at such a vital time as this regulating the nerves and purifying the blood is a serious mistake. Men and women distressed by nervous troubles or the effects of impure blood cannot afford now to lose a day before taking advantage of Paine's celery compound.

In order to avoid disappointment accept nothing but Paine's celery compound. A clerk who tries to sell something else than what people ask for is evidently not disinterested. He has an eye to profits more than to the good of customers.

There can be no substitute for Paine's celery compound.

This has been shown time and time again in cases where persons, too easily led, have carried home something besides Paine's celery compound, and have failed to get the decided benefit they had hoped for.

The strongest indorsement ever received for this great spring remedy—and no remedy ever compared with Paine's celery compound in the character and the number of the witnesses to its efficiency—the strong st indorsement it ever received did not overestimate or exaggerate in the least its unrivalled power of making people well.

BILL'S IN TROUBLE.

I've got a letter, parson, from my son away out West,
An' my ol' heart is heavy as an anvil in my breast
To think the boy whose futur' I had once so proudly planned
Should wander from the path o' right an'
come to sich an end!
I told him when he left us only three short years ago
He'd find himself a plowin' in a mighty crooked row—
He'd miss his father's counsels, an' his mother's prayers, too,
But he said the farm was hateful, an' he guessed he'd have to go.

I know thar's big temptation for a youngster in the West,
But I believed our Billy had the courage to resist,
An' when he left I warned him o' the ever-waitin' snares
That lie like hidden sarpints in life's pathway everywheres.
But Bill he promised faithful to be keer-ful, an' allowed
He'd build a reputation that'd make us mighty proud,
But it seems as how my counsel sort o'
faded from his mind,
An' now the boy's in trouble o' the very wustest kind!

His letters came so seldom that I somehow sort o' knowed
That Billy was a trampin' on a mighty rocky road,
But never once imagined he would bow
my head in shame,
An' in the dust'd waller his ol' daddy's honored name.
He writes from out in Denver, an' the story's mighty short;
I just can't tell his mother; it'll crush her poor ol' heart!
An' so I reckoned, parson, you might break the news to her—Bill's in the Legislatur', but he doesn't say what fur.
—Denver Post.

THE POISONED SPEAR

"It is rather a bad hole, boys, sure enough, and the Lord bless you, it was nip and tuck between me and the devil for a little while, I tell you. I can't even think of the thing now without feeling my blood run cold.

"Does it ever hurt me? Well, I should say it does. I can feel the blamed stuff rankling in my bones this very minute.

"Eh; what stuff? Why the poison, of course.

"Well, if you must have the story, I'll tell it, seeing as I'd have to anyhow; but as it's getting late and I'm as sleepy as a 3-weeks-old cub, I'll warrant it'll not be very long and strung out.

"So you want to know how I come to have that big ugly hole in my arm there, do you?

"All right, boys, all right; you shall know; you shall know. Give me a match, somebody. This tobacco must be wet, or green, or something. It's forever and eternally going out on a fellow.

"Early in the fall of the year 1868 or 1869, I'm not sure which, there were some ten or twelve of us hunting wild horses on the Upper Rio Grande, in the northern part of the Territory of New Mexico. The Indians were quiet enough at the time and game wasn't scarce, so what with plenty to eat, tobacco galore, a cask of rum and pretty fair luck with the lasso, we watched our corral getting full with contented hearts.

"We had been some six or seven weeks in camp when one of the boys, an Irishman named Mike Moriarity, came in from an antelope trail that he had been following two whole days, with the startling intelligence that there were Indians on the creek about three miles above camp.

"He hadn't stopped to get close sight of them, but from the fact that they were mounted and that they numbered no women among them he was pretty certain that they wore a band of Apaches on the war-path.

"I DREW A BEAD ON HIM."

"This news was somewhat alarming, to say the least, for we well knew what our fate would be if we fell into the hands of the red devils, and a strict guard was set that night for, previous to that time, we had been living a happy-go-lucky kind of a life, secure in our fancied isolation, leaving the camp to take care of itself, after we laid our pipes by and rolled ourselves in our blankets. No attack was made, however, and three days afterwards a reconnoisance of the creek above brought the welcome news that the redskins were gone.

"Early that afternoon some one suggested that we should visit the abandoned camp, and five of us, including myself and Moriarity, set out for that purpose. As had been reported, the savages were gone and all that remained of the late cantonment was the ashes of the dead fires and the debris of some of their barbaric feasts.

"We were still wandering over the apparently deserted plateau when a hair-raising yell behind up brought us about with a start to see a score of mounted Apaches urging their mustangs at the top of their speed towards us.

"There was no time for hesitation. We were close under a row of small cottonwoods, which fringed the creek, and in a moment were out of our saddles, for we were mounted, peppering away at our assailants for dear life, and making pretty much every shot tell, too.

"The conflict was a brief but decisive one. Within fifteen minutes it was ended by the complete rout of the Apaches. Or rather of all but one. He was a heavily built fellow, radiant with warpaint, and bristling with tomahawk, knife, arrows and a long spear. He was evidently the leader and opposed the flight of his followers with fiery vehemence. When he found himself alone, instead of joining the stampede, he turned on us fiercely once more. It seemed as if he single-handed and alone proposed to assail us again.

"As he whirled his mustang about I drew bead on him. He caught the flash of the sunlight on my rifle barrel, and raised his spear. Then came a report and a whiz in the air at the same time. The Apache dropped backwards from his saddle, and I clapped my hand over a deep spear wound in my arm.

"The lance had struck me in the fleshy part of the left forearm and dropped to the ground. Moriarity, who was an old Indian fighter, snatched it up and examined the head, which was a section of an old knife-blade ground to a razor-like edge. He dropped it in a moment and turned to me with a very grave face.

"'I thought so,' he said anxiously.

"'Thought what?' I asked, endeavoring to staunch the flow of blood that streamed over my hand. 'What do you mean?'

"'I mean it's pizened, sir,' was the reply.

"And so it was. Upon the point of the spearhead were still some spots of thick green substance, a vegetable poison used by the savages to render their primitive weapons more deadly in effect. Within five minutes I fainted with the inexpressible agony of the wound.

"Boys, I've been partially scalped; I've been torn by the claws of savage beasts; I've been bored through and through with leaden bullets, and I've went for days at a time, under a hot broiling sun, without so much as a drop of water to drink, but never before or since have I experienced the intense suffering, the terrible misery which I endured during those few preceding minutes.

"When I recovered consciousness, half a pound of flesh, more or less, had been taken from my arm. The operation spoiled its usefulness in a measure, but it saved my life.

"The Indian? Oh! He turned out to be Hawkeye, one of the most famous chiefs of the Apaches. He and eleven of his followers reached the happy hunting grounds at about the same time. My bullet had found his heart."

The Mosquito.

The female mosquito, after she has filled herself with blood—the male insect is not a blood sucker—seeks out some dark and sheltered spot near stagnant water.

At the end of about six days she quits her shelter, and, alighting on the surface of the water, deposits her eggs thereon. She then dies, and, as a rule, falls into the water beside her eggs. The eggs float about for a time, and then, in due course, give birth to tiny swimming larvae. These larvae, in virtue of a voracious appetite, grow apace, casting their skins several times to admit of growth.

Later, they pass into the nympha stage, during which, after a time, they float on the surface of the water. Finally, the shell of the nympha cracks along its dorsal surface and a young mosquito floats on the surface of the water while its wings are drying and acquiring rigidity. When this is complete it flies away.

The young mosquito larvae, to satisfy their prodigious appetites, devour everything eatable they come across; and one of the first things they eat, if they get the chance, is the dead body of their parent, now soft and sodden from decomposition and long immersion.

They even devour their own cast-off skins. In examining mosquito larvae one often comes across specimens whose alimentary canals are stuffed with the scales, fragments of limbs, and other remains of the maternal insect.

Jubal's Call.

The daughter of Dr. Edward Hodges, the organist, says that her father had a delightful way of calling all the children musically. One Sunday morning, when he was playing in St. John's Chapel, New York, he said to her:

"I am going to call Jubal. Watch him."

Jubal was sitting in his accustomed place near the middle aisle. Doctor Hodges' voluntary began thoughtfully and smoothly, but in the course of it, a significant phrase of two notes was twice repeated. It was distinct, and yet so truly a part of the improvisation that no stranger would have noticed it at all.

The first time, Jubal's attention was arrested; the second, he turned and looked up, but saw no sign. At the third call, he deliberately took up his hat, left the pew, walked straight up to his father, and said:

"Do you want me, sir?"

"Yes," said Doctor Hodges. "Go home and get my gold snuffbox."

The errand was speedily executed, for the house stood near. Jubal handed the snuffbox to his father, and returned to his seat.

Fund to Injured Railroad Men.

In ten years $1,000,000 has been paid out by the casualty fund of the British Benevolent Institution to injured railway men and their families.

There is one thing about a crop of wild oats: It harvests itself.

Desirable Feed Rack.

When hay is fed loose in the barnyard a certain per cent. of it is trampled under foot and wasted. In order to prevent this, in part at least, a feed rack of some kind should be erected in the center of the yard at a point which will be the most sunny and pleasant possible. A writer in the New York Tribune gives an illustrated description of a good rack. He says:

A simple but effectual way in which to build one of these feed racks is to begin by setting four tall posts in the ground in the form of a rectangle, as shown in the cut. Their height and distance apart will determine the size and capacity of the rack. It is inadvisable, however, to make it very wide—say not over six feet—as some difficulty would be experienced by the animals in pulling out the hay if bound solidly in the center. Set the posts leaning toward the center in order to make the opening wider at the bottom than at the top. This will prevent binding, and in consequence the hay will readily settle as it is being eaten away from below. From about eighteen inches above ground to the top of the posts the sides and ends should be boarded tightly, making it possibl for the animal to get at the hay only at the bottom. Many consider it a good plan to cover such a rack with a shed roof, thus always keeping the hay dry.

CONVENIENT AND INEXPENSIVE.

Defiance to Hard Times.

Farmers are the most comfortable and independent people on the earth, although to be a successful farmer nowadays requires a man not only to be a good worker, but a student as well, for it requires brains as well as muscle to grow the right kind of crops in the right way and sell them at the right time. When I am asked by strangers what my occupation is, I proudly answer that I am a farmer. As I sat down to dinner yesterday (just a common everyday farmer's dinner) I remarked to my wife that we had raised nearly everything on the table. There was fresh pork steak with brown gravy, potatoes, Hubbard squash, turnips (the last three were mashed with a little cream added), cucumber pickles, tomato soy, fresh butter, bread, preserved strawberries, apple pie, comb honey, cream (the good, thick, yellow kind), milk with the "top on it," and coffee. When a farmer can raise so much for his own use, he has not much in the grocery line to buy, and still be comfortably well fed. With a small piece of land well tilled, the farmer can bid defiance to hard times.—A Contented Farmer, in American Agriculturist.

For Handling Barrels.

The usual storage place for apples is in the cellar, says American Gardening. The barrels then have to be carried up the roll-way by two men—a matter of no little difficulty when the roll-way is narrow, as is usually the case. A plan is shown in the cut by which the barrels of apples are carried to the surface with but little lifting, and without jarring the fruit. The diagram tells its own story, except that the triangular truck that is mounted on two rollers is represented larger than need be, thus making it higher than is actually necessary. The rollers run on a wide plank that rests on the edge of the stair treads. The same arrangement will be found equally serviceable in putting apples into the cellar in the fall, and for use with vegetables, etc.

HAULING FROM THE CELLAR.

Handling Seed Potatoes.

Taking the results of a large number of trials at experiment stations, and deducting the small potatoes and the number of bushels of seed used from the total yield, two-eye pieces give an increase of fifteen bushels per acre over one-eye pieces; quarters give an increase of seven bushels per acre over two-eye pieces; halves give an increase of five bushels per acre over quarters, and halves give an increase of eight and one-half bushels per acre over whole potatoes. The price per bushel is usually so much higher for seed than for the freshly harvested crop, that the advantage of five bushels in yield of halves over quarters will generally be more than wiped out; so that the net profit will usually be greatest where the seed potatoes were cut in quarters.

Testing Cows.

Do not depend on a single test to determine the value of any cow, as she may be off her feed, in heat, or in some other way not quite right. When a cow in the World's Fair test showed an abnormal per cent. of fat, the superintendents would go immediately to the barn and take the cow's temperature. They would nearly always find her feverish. There were some days a cow gave nearly twice as much butter as the day before. A test made on either of the days would have been unjust. The Guernsey cow that made the highest weekly record for that breed in the World's Fair test, 16¼ pounds, was fourth among the Guernseys in production in the ninety-day test, and was the tail-ender of the Guernseys in the thirty-day test. There were ten Guernseys in that test that had been milked longer than she had, and that excelled her in both production and profit. A single test is better than none, and it is an excellent way to buy cows by testing them, but every dairyman should keep a daily record of milk from each of his cows, and test the milk as often as once a month, so as to know what he is doing. Commence to-day. Don't put it off.—Wisconsin Farmer.

More Use of Wind Power.

Not nearly enough use is made of wind power. Most of the wind mills we see are used wholly to pump water from wells. Though this as a steady job probably saves as much labor as any one thing the wind power could be set to doing, there are many other back-aching jobs that are on many farms done by hand power, which might quite as well be given over to wind power. Turning grindstones and churning are among these. When young we knew some farmer boys who put up a light windmill which turned a lathe in a shop. Here they spent many hours making all kinds of wooden articles. All of these boys kept up their love of farm life, because their windmill was set to do tasks that on other farms the boys had to perform by what sailors call "main" strength and stupidness. In Holland there can be no use of water power, for the land is too level. Nowhere in the world is wind power used to so much advantage or for so great a variety of purposes.—American Cultivator.

Orchard and Garden.

The best grass for the orchard is orchard grass, mixed well with red clover.

Potash makes firm and stocky peach wood, but has little effect on the fruit.

Fruits are a luxury, necessity, appetizer, stimulant, tonic, food and medicine all in one.

Thorough pruning of the gooseberry plants is one of the most effective preventives of mildew.

It is the freezing and thawing of the ground that hurts the strawberry beds.

Three or four strong canes to one hill of raspberries are better than a dozen weak, spindling ones.

The cause of moss appearing on the stems of apple and other fruit trees is wet, cold, undrained land.

A Safety Drinking Dish.

The sketch herewith shows a device for keeping fowls from upsetting their drinking dish. A shallow box has a crosspiece fitted to it, as shown. The box is tilted on one end and the dish of water inserted without spilling. The box is then gently set back upon the ground, when it successfully holds the dish from being upset. This device is suitable for both window and outdoor use.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Spring-Sown Timothy Seed.

While it is always safer to sow timothy seed in the fall at or soon after the time fall grain is sown, the farmer who grows only spring grain need not despair of getting a good timothy catch with it. He should get the land fitted as early and as thoroughly as possible, which will be easy if the land has been fall plowed. It will then only need surface cultivation in the spring. Probably the grain growth will keep the timothy back the first season, so that it will be very small in the fall. It is better to sow some alsike clover seed with the timothy, so as to occupy the land the first year.

Carriage Horses.

We have a fine class of brood mares suitable for raising carriage horses, and if we are to breed colts, in my opinion this class would pay best. As like will produce like, would only breed from the best, just the individuals that find a ready sale in our home or city markets. Speed, combined with good qualities, helps to sell colts, so would breed to a stallion with trotting blood in his veins, provided he possesses the other qualities necessary in a stock horse, but I would first examine his colts, and make sure he was not breeding those little scrubs so often seen among our high bloods—Farm News.

Sparrows and Other Birds.

It is not altogether the fault of sparrows that other native birds are becoming scarce. It is mainly caused by the wanton slaughter of birds by men and boys, and the habit of women of wearing birds upon their bonnets, which to any thinking person only brands them as heartless, or at least as thoughtless. The common birds have some of them learned to defend themselves against the sparrow. The robin, especially, which is much larger than the sparrow, has learned that, if he will, he can be more than a match for the little tormentors.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

How the Lantern Was Invented.

King Alfred the Great is credited with originating the lantern. He was so bothered by the candle flames blowing in the wind that he protected them by putting the candles in cow-horns, which he ordered to be scraped thin. Our grandfathers made lanterns by punching holes and slits in properly shaped pieces of tin, which were then soldered together. The light which came through the little cuts was always very dim and flickering. It was this kind of lantern which the old town watchmen used to carry when they went about calling the hours and the weather in rhyme:

"'Tis one o' the clock—midnight is past,
Sleep on, good friends, the time thou hast,
For rise ye must at early dawn;
'Tis one o' the clock and Tuesday morn."

Easier than Arithmetic.

It is easier to remember things usually if you know what they mean. A little boy could never remember even about how long a cubit is until his father told him the word was cubitus in Latin, which means an elbow, and that the measure called cubit was the distance from a man's elbow to the end of his middle finger.

"And how much is a fathom?" asked the little boy.

"Oh, fathom comes from the two words, 'fat,' which means in the Aryan language, to extend, and 'hom,' a man. A fathom is the length of a man extended; that is, when his arms are stretched out on each side from the shoulders, from tip to tip of his fingers.

The foot is an English word, and means just the length of the foot of a full-grown man.

Making Candy in a Paper Pan.

The girls of some of our Eastern colleges have a novel method of candy-making which deserves to be known outside this magic circle—especially as the results are particularly delicious.

They take a sheet of heavy, glazed writing paper and turn up the four edges to a depth of about three-fourths of an inch. Into this box they pour a cupful of white sugar and a very little water, and set it on top of the stove. One would think the paper would burn, but it does not. The sugar boils up charmingly and looks tempting enough in its dainty receptacle.

When it is done a drop or two of flavoring is added, or just before taking from the fire some nut meats are strewn over its surface. It is then taken off the stove and set to float in its paper box in a bowl or basin of water. When cold it should be brittle, and then the paper can be peeled off, and a dainty square of toothsome candy is the reward.

It is great fun to make and will surprise your friends if they chance to see it boiling in its paper box.

Combat with a Tiger.

Russian hunters are said to look upon a combat single-handed with a bear as only an ordinary experience. It is doubtful, however, if many instances of a man attacking a tiger, armed with a sword only, can be found. Col. Seaton, the elephant hunter, however, tells this story of bravery:

"One morning, just as we were leaving the parade ground, a man came rushing up breathless. 'Get your guns, men,' he exclaimed; 'there is a tiger in the hollow by the hut, and no one dares go by!' In all haste we got our guns and two elephants and hurried to the spot, where in truth a terrible scene presented itself. The tiger, bleeding from a cut in the head, was on the edge of the hollow, growling fiercely, with a man mangled and apparently dead lying beneath his paws. The unfortunate man was a fine swordsman and first-rate wrestler—one of the champions of his regiment. Some people who went to draw water at the well had disturbed the tiger, and on his rising they fled in terror. The brave but rash soldier, who happened to be near at the moment, on learning the cause of the commotion, immediately advanced to attack the tiger, and with his sword gave him a tremendous cut over the head, which, however, did not materially injure the powerful brute. The tiger rushed at the man, stripped the arm down to the elbow, and, dashing him to the ground, held him beneath his paws. When we came up we were at first at a loss how to act, for the man was as much exposed to our fire as the tiger. However it was not a time for lengthened consideration—we fired, and a lucky shot finished the animal."

Whistling Not a Bad Habit.

The boy in the following story is described as never saying anything remarkable, as eating oatmeal in large quantities, chasing the cat, slamming the door, and otherwise conducting himself after the manner of boys, with the exception that he asked few questions and does much thinking. If he does not understand a thing he whistles, which is not a bad habit—on some occasions.

There was much whistling in our yard one summer. It seemed to be an all-summer performance. Near the end of the season, however, our boy announced the height of our tall maple to be thirty-three feet.

"Why, how do you know?" was the general question.

"Measured it."

"How?"

"Four-foot rule and yardstick."

"You didn't climb that tall tree?" his mother asked anxiously.

"No'm. I just found the length of the shadow and measured that."

"But the length of the shadow changes."

"Yes'm, but twice a day the shadows are just as long as the things themselves. I've been trying it all summer. I drove a stick into the ground and when the shadow was just as long as the stick I knew that the shadow of the tree would be just as long as the tree, and that's thirty-three feet."

"So that is what you have been whistling about all summer?"

"Did I whistle?" asked Tom.

The First American Flag.

A well-known authority on American curios says: "The first resemblance to a flag was the work of Benjamin Franklin and Messrs. Harrison and Lynch. They were chosen as a committee to create a national flag, and adopted the King's colors as a union, reunited with thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; showing that, although the colonies united for defense against England's tyranny, they still acknowledged her sovereignty." On Tuesday, Jan. 2, 1776, this flag was hoisted in camp at Cambridge, Mass., now Somerville, receiving a salute of thirteen guns and thirteen cheers. The first American-made flag was hoisted over the capitol at Washington Feb. 24, 1866, all previous flags having been manufactured from English bunting.

Indians Not Allowed to Vote.

The expression "Indians not taxed" refers to the Indians in their tribal relations. Tribal Indians are not allowed to vote because they are not taxed, and are the wards of the Government, rather than citizens of the country. The Government considers them as its proteges, whom it must protect. When the tribal relations of the Indians are dissolved and their land is divided among them, to be held by individuals rather than by tribes, it is almost certain that provision will be made for them as citizens, and that, being landowners and taxpayers, they will be entitled to and will receive all the rights of full citizenship.

DISGUISED AS MEN.

WOMEN WHO HAVE LIVED FOR YEARS IN MALE ATTIRE.

The Manchester Bricklayer Who Mistrust-trusted His "Wife"—A Mysterious Case of Modern Times—Names Withheld by the Relator—A Prominent Professional Man?

In the month of April, 1838, Mr. Thomas, an attorney of Manchester, was seated alone in his office, when a client was shown in. She came, she said, to obtain a divorce from her husband, who was a master bricklayer, doing an excellent business. She complained that he drank heavily and when under the influence of liquor would beat her severely. This ill treatment she bore patiently until he finally refused to give her money for housekeeping expenses, whereupon she sought a separation.

When more closely questioned, the woman unfolded to the ears of the astonished lawyer the following remarkable story:

The master bricklayer had at birth been relegated to the feminine portion of humanity, but being early disgusted with the restricted life of girlhood he donned masculine attire and apprenticed himself to a bricklayer. (The personal pronouns are apt to get a little mixed in such descriptions, so I will adhere to the masculine.) He showed an unusual knack in his chosen trade and soon became his own master. He was a handsome young fellow, and many maidens fell in love with the dashing young mechanic, and he finally chose and married the woman who became Mr. Thomas' client.

Upon investigation this astonishing story was found to be strictly true. The bricklayer had acted as special constable for Manchester and had occupied other essentially masculine positions in the community, always being on hand when riots or any other danger threatened. The true sex of this esteemed citizen had never been suspected during the 25 years he had worn the disguise until domestic differences caused his partner to reveal the secret.

There is a well authenticated instance on record of a girl who adopted masculine apparel when she was 3 years of age, or rather, to be more accurate, her father dressed her as a boy that she might the better dance at public houses. She continued in this disguise for 40 years without being discovered.

To come down to modern times, the writer, though unable to mention names and localities, as one of the parties concerned is still living, knows of a striking example pertinent to the subject.

But five short years have been told since the final scene in this drama of real life was enacted. But to begin at the beginning:

There were two sisters, educated and refined ladies, left orphaned and well nigh penniless. Both of them were beauties, one tall, dark and courageous, the other blond, small and gentle. The elder girl made up her mind to adopt a bold course. She took the little money they possessed and rented and stocked a little store in a distant city, where they were unknown; then, taking her sister, they stole quietly away.

In their new home they represented themselves as man and wife, did well in business and were universally respected.

Years passed. The gentleman (?) saved money, took up a pursuit more congenial to his tastes and became one of the most prominent men (?) in the city. The couple bought a beautiful home on Blank avenue, entertained and were entertained by the best society in the place. Everybody said: "What a handsome couple, she so delicately beautiful with her golden hair, he so stately and dark."

One afternoon, when the lady was "at home" to her friends and was surrounded by a laughing, chattering group, she saw, approaching across the room, with his eyes fixed upon her face, one of the best known physicians of the city. The man's face was so grave that it startled her, and her heart began to beat heavily with a foreboding of evil to come.

The doctor came up hastily, and without the usual formal greeting spoke to her in a low, excited voice:

"Mr. —— fell dead of heart disease in his office about an hour ago. Only one of the clerks attended him, when I was called in. If you wish to preserve the secret, you had better come at once."

The doctor was not one who believed in breaking bad news gradually, but it were better he had adopted less abrupt measures in that instance, for the poor little lady was entirely overcome, and shrieking out, "What shall I do?" she fell at his feet in a faint.

Well, the story was hushed up and came to the ears of only a few people, but it is a true story just the same.

Such instances abound. There is today in one of the great cities of these United States a prominent professional man who is a disguised woman. He is a well to do bachelor and is considered a very desirable parti by matchmaking mammas and marriageable daughters.

To attempt to enumerate the cases of women who have temporarily assumed masculine disguise would be a hopeless task. Even such instances as are on record, doubtless representing a very small percentage of the real occurrences in this line, would fill volumes.

This unnatural feminine attitude toward life, arising from many causes, is a matter of psychological interest.

We hear a great deal lately about the "abnormal woman," but the term "abnormal" is relative and should be applied with much discretion, or it will become meaningless.

It would perhaps be hardly accurate to use the word to describe even the class of women represented in this paper, but they may be truly said to have led most abnormal lives and may in consequence be of much interest to the student of the "weaker sex."

BRYAN'S VIEWS.

In replying to the following question telegraphed to the Examiner, "What in your judgment is the best way to bring about Democratic unity?" William Jennings Bryan wired as follows. It is one of the most important political documents of the year:

LINCOLN, Neb., May 15.—To W. R. Hearst the Examiner, San Francisco: I might reply to your inquiry by saying that there is now entire harmony within the Democratic party. The members of the party were never more united in purpose nor more zealous than at the present time. Neither is there lack of harmony among the bolting Democrats. They seem just as determined to carry out Republican policies as they were during the campaign. If, however, you mean by your question to ask whether there is any common ground upon which the two Democratic organizations can meet, I answer, No.

Webster defines a party as a number of persons, united in opinion and acting to influence or control the action of the community. Agreement in opinion is the essential thing in a party. No lexicographer has yet defined a party to be a union of two hostile factions, each determined by the question which is paramount in the minds of the people.

The regular Democrats in their last national convention declared the money question to be the paramount issue. The bolting Democrats, in their minority report at Chicago, and in their platform at Indianapolis, recognized the money question as being the paramount issue.

The regular Democrats announced their unalterable opposition to monometalism, describing it as an un-American financial policy. They demanded the restoration of free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at the present ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation. They declared that the silver dollar should be a legal tender equally with gold for all debts, public and private, and insist that the Government should retain the right to redeem coin obligations in either gold or silver. They also expressed themselves emphatically opposed to national bank currency.

The gold Democrats endorsed the gold standard, declared against the restoration of bimetallism by the independent action of this nation, and demanded the retirement of the greenbacks and treasury notes.

The Democrats who supported the Chicago platform are now as firmly in favor of the position taken upon the money question as they were during the campaign. If any change has taken place, their devotion has increased rather than diminished. The adoption of a gold standard by Japan and Peru has increased the strain upon gold and emphasized the warnings uttered by the advocates of free silver during the campaign.

There is nothing to indicate that the leaders among the gold Democrats feel any more kindly toward the regular organization than they did six months ago; in fact, it is only a few days since the most conspicuous bolters met at a Waldorf dinner, and not only paid homage to the golden image which they have set up, but breathed threatenings and slaughter against greenbacks and treasury notes.

The attempt has been made in some quarters to push the tariff question to the front, and I do not think this effort can be successful. The tariff question is no more important now than it was during the campaign, and it was not important enough then to keep the gold Democrats in the fold. To be sure, the gold Democrats are criticising the Dingley bill, but the moment the Republicans turn their attention to the money question all complaining will cease, and the gold Democrats will be found in the front ranks fighting shoulder to shoulder with the Republican leaders. If the Republicans attempt any further degradation of silver the gold Democrats will be their allies. If they attempt to retire greenbacks and treasury notes, directly or indirectly, they can rely upon the earnest co-operation of gold Democrats.

Both the regular Democrats and the gold Democrats know that the money question will be the paramount issue of 1900, and it is folly to expect that neither branch of the party will give any material assistance to the representatives of the other branch while this great contest continues.

Knowing that they will fight each other three years hence, is it reasonable to suppose that they can be political friends in the mean time?

When that gallant Democrat, Colonel Watt Hardin, was a candidate for Governor of Kentucky, two years ago, many gold Democrats would not support him because they feared his election would strengthen the silver cause, and there is no evidence that the gold Democrats have lost any of their sensitiveness on this subject.

Is it probable that the silver Democrats will exert themselves to give political positions and influence to men who will use their position and influence against bimetallism in the next great battle?

When I say that political friendship is impossible between regular Democrats and bolters, I do not mean to say that there is or ought to be any personal hostility between the members of the two organizations. On the other hand, I affirm that there should be the broadest charity and tolerance. Republicans and Democrats have in the past mingled together in society and business circles, although they have voted against each other at the polls. In like manner there can be the friendliest personal relations between regular Democrats and bolters, but there can be no harmonious political association between them.

The regular Democrats and bolters now have separate and distinct party organizations. No matter which is regarded as God and which Mammon, no one can serve both. It is as impossible for a person to belong to both Democratic organizations as it is for a person to be both a Democrat and Republican at the same time. No Democrat who believes that the gold standard is a conspiracy formed among money-changers for the enslavement of the producers of wealth can act with gold Democrats, and no gold Democrat who believes that the restoration of silver will ruin the country can act with the regular Democrats.

If any one who now believes in the free coinage becomes converted to the gold standard, it will be an easy matter for him to transfer his allegiance to the bolting organization.

If any one who now believes in the gold standard becomes convinced of his error the way is open for him to return to the regular organization, but any attempt at compromising will not only be futile, but will be disastrous to the regular organization.

Bimetallism can only be restored by affirmative action, therefore any compromise must be at the expense of the advocates of bimetallism.

There can be no permanent peace, nor even a truce, without a cessation of hostilities, and a cessation of hostilities means the preservation of the existing conditions. In other words, harmony between the regular Democrats and the bolters means the maintenance of the gold standard as long as that harmony lasts.

Not only does harmony mean the temporary maintenance of the gold standard but it gives to the gold Democrats a party standing which will make them more potent for evil in the next contest. Much of the harm which they did in 1896 grew out of the fact that they used the Democratic name for the purpose of deception. If the bolting organization is left alone it will be powerless to deceive by the time we enter upon another national contest. If, however, the two organizations patch up a temporary peace, the distinction between them will become obliterated and the same fraud can be perpetrated in 1900 which was perpetrated in 1896. The regular Democrats have everything to lose and nothing to gain by making concessions to those who desire to use the Democratic name without supporting the Democratic principles.

I have only spoken of the difference which exists upon the money question. Next to the money question in importance is the question of trusts. Many of the gold Democrats are so tied up with trusts and monopolies of the country that even if they were with us they would be an embarrassment rather than an aid to the position taken by the regular Democrats upon the money question, and the question of trusts is in harmony with the doctrine that the Government should guarantee equal privileges to none. It will not contribute to the ultimate success of the party to conciliate those whose instincts or business connections lead them to repudiate the fundamental Democratic principle, namely: Equality before the law.

NOTICE No. 309.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, Independence, Cal. May 5, 1897.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT R. C. Chambers, whose residence and post office address is Salt Lake City, Utah, by A. A. Neil, his Attorney in fact has made application for a United States Patent for the Senator Lode mining claim, situate in Union Mining District, Inyo County, California, consisting of 1,500 linear feet of the lode and surface ground 600 feet wide, being Lot No. 40 and described in the field notes and plat of the official survey on file in this office, with magnetic variation at 15 degrees 46 minutes east, as follows:

Commencing at the Southeast corner of the claim, from which corner, the corner to Sections 1, 2, 11 and 12, T. 12, S. R. 34 E. bears South 74 deg. ¼ W. 228.50 ch. distant, and running thence North 38 deg. E 22 72 ch. 1500 ft. to the Northeast corner, from which corner a block of granite marked X bears South 6 deg. ¾ E. 2.75 ch. distant, and running thence North 56 deg. ¼ W. 9.09 ch. 600 ft. to the Northwest corner, thence South 38 deg. W. 22 72 ch. 1,500 ft. to the Southwest corner; thence South 38 deg. W. 22.72 ch. 1500 ft. to the Southwest corner; thence South 56 deg. ¼ E. 9.09 ch. 600 ft. to the Southeast corner the place of beginning, containing an area of 20.58 acres, all of which is claimed and applied for. The lode line of the Senator runs from a stone mound on the Southerly endline of the claim North 38 deg. E 22.72 ch. 1500 ft. to a point on the northerly endline of the claim, marked old location monument on the official plat. Local orchardists report that the fruit crop this year will be more than average. There is an abundance of cherries and strawberries now in the market.

A new process is being tried on the Candelaria ores and, it is asserted, with a fair prospect of success. If it should indeed prove so, a 100 stamp mill will be erected.

H. D. Gill made final proof on his homestead at Camp Independence last Saturday. John W. Calbreath proved up on his homestead at George's Creek on Monday.

W. S. Wheeler arrived here from Denver, Col., last Wednesday. He is a friend of Harry Floyd, latterly from England, and traveling in America for his health.

H. C. Ratcliff arrived at Independence on Wednesday from Ballarat, in the Panamint country, returning yesterday. Mr. Ratcliff owns a number of valuable mines in that region.

Meads and Shober's teams, with twelve animals each, arrived at Independence yesterday. They had about two tons of freight for this place, the balance of their load being for Bishop.

New Five-Stamp Mill.

The miners at Fish Springs have clubbed in together and are constructing a five-stamp mill, which will soon be in operation. This will be a great improvement over the former method of working in arrastras, both in speed and labor-saving, and also will permit the use of concentrators, which will be an important consideration, as the ores of the district carry a large percentage of sulphurets. There is enough ore on the various dumps to keep the mill running for some time. The work is being done in an economical manner. The stamp shoes, dies and other iron work is taken from the old Litchfield mill at Crysopolis and the men are doing the work themselves. Fish Springs is a good "poor man's camp," and the new mill will very materially increase the output of the district.

Church Festival.

Last evening the musical members of the church united in rendering the song service entitled "Dora." Among those who assisted in the singing were Amy Lawrence, Mrs. W. Lamar, Mrs. Nettie Webb, Miss Muth Rasmussen, Miss Maud Cook and Mr. Nicholas, accompanied by Mr. Muth Rasmussen and Miss Irma Webb, soloist. The service contains some beautiful music, though of a decidedly mournful character. Dora, the principal character, has troubles and trials innumerable, nurses a lover until his death, then handles a smallpox case or two, and at last dies to slow music. After the song service, the ladies dispensed ice cream and cake for 25 cents a plate, and the proceeds were turned over to pay for Sunday-school books.

Must Use Wide Tires.

The farmers of California have a little more than thirty one months to get ready for the new wide tire law, which takes effect on January 1, 1900. The requirements are: For 1⅞-inch iron axle, 3-inch tire; 2⅛ axle, 3½ inch tire; 2⅜ axle, 4-inch tire; 2⅝ axle, 4½-inch tire; 2⅞ axle, 5-inch tire; 4 inch axle or larger, 6 inch tire. For thimble skeins and steel axles, see law. Penalty for each time smaller tires are used on the road, $25 to $500 fine or go to jail. There is no doubt this law will be enforced after it takes effect, and farmers buying or repairing wagons will do well to begin to meet the requirements of the law at once. Buy no wagons with tires less than the law requires, except at a discount sufficient to pay for the new tires when the time comes.

A Surprise Party

Last Tuesday evening the young folks in the vicinity joined in tendering Miss Margie Bell of Camp Independence a surprise party. Laden with good things to eat and accompanied by a trio of good musicians to play while they danced, the merrymakers were fitted to pass a most jolly evening. The Bell family united in making all welcome and assuring a good time for everybody. It was 3 o'clock in the morning before the affair broke up.

Coso Springs.

O. C. Harper came in from Coso yesterday. He says that the boys at Coso Springs have not done very well so far. The ground has been too wet to operate drywashers except for a couple of hours occasionally. Tom Ferguson has a good claim. Tom Shaw is there, but so far has failed to make expenses.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. Va., and one of the most widely known men in that State, was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June, 1894, Evans, then salesman for the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size, and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Hundreds of thousands have been induced to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy by reading what it has done for others, and having tested its merits for themselves are to-day its warmest friends. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

NOTICE OF FORFEITURE.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, County of Inyo. May 20th, 1897.

TO THE HEIRS OF JOHN WILSON, DECEASED.

YOU ARE HEREBY NOTIFIED THAT I have expended $100 in labor and improvements upon those certain mines of mining claims situated in Beveridge Mining District, Inyo county, California, commonly known as and called the St. Tecmo mine, Benicia mine, Montano mine, and the Santa Cruze mine, as will appear by certificates filed in the office of the County Recorder of said Inyo county, in order to hold said premises for the years 1895 and 1896, under the provisions of section 2324 of the Revised statutes of the United States, being the amount required to hold the same for the two years ending December 31, 1896. And if within 90 days after the publication of this notice you fail or refuse to contribute your portion of such expenditures as co-owners, to wit, $50, your interest in said claims will become the property of the subscriber under said Section 2324, and under section 1 of an Act entitled, "An Act relating to the working rights of way, easements and drainage of mines in the State of California" approved March 21st, 1891.

CONCERNING THE ROAD LAW.

The Attorney General's View of the Gem Puzzle

The District Attorneys of several counties having written to Attorney-General Fitzgerald concerning the apparent conflic tbetween the County Government Act and the act to establish a uniform system of road governments, he has replied to District Attorney Berrington of Santa Clara county that in his opinion there is no serious conflict between the two acts in question, and that it was clearly the intention of the Legislature that the act for the establishment of a uniform system of road government should prevail.

"Subdivision 4 of section 2 of the County Government Act," the Attorney-General says, "provides that such boards shall have jurisdiction 'to lay out, maintain, control, construct, repair and manage public roads, turnpikes, ferries, wharves, chutes and other shipping facilities and bridges within the county, unless otherwise provided by law.'

"The saving clause, unless otherwise provided by law,' was, in my opinion, placed there for the express purpose of meeting the question now under consideration. In drafting the County Government Act, its framers could not of course anticipate the probable action of the Legislature upon the road law which was pending before it. Therefore, they naturally made provision in the County Gogernment Act for a system of road government under the supervision of the Board of Supervisors to be effective 'unless otherwise provided by law'—that is, unless the special act for a uniform system of road governments, which was pending before the Legislature, passed and met with the approval of the Governor. Furthermore, the two acts were passed on the same day and go into effect at the same time. They are, therefore, in paria materia, and so far as they concern the same subject matter, must be read together as if parts of the same Act."

In reference to the question as to whether elections for Road Trustees must be held this year, the Attorney-General has sent the following opinion to District Attorney Daley of San Bernardino:

"I am of the opinion that it was the intention of the Legislature that the act should be put into immediate operation. Effect must be given to that intention if it is possible to do so. The chief difficulty arises from the fact that there is an express authority conferred upon any person or board to put the machinery of the road government prescribed by the act in motion. An annual election of Road Trustees is provided for, but the entire machinery of such election is placed in the hands of the Road Trustees themselves, who are officials created by this act and for the appointment or election of whom in the first instance no express provision is made. The 'last Saturday of May of each year' is the time fixed by the act for holding the annual election of Road Trustees. The last Saturday of May of this year falls upon the 29th and as the act does not take effect until two days later—the 31st—it is of course impossible to hold a regular election for such officers until the last Saturday of May, 1898.

"I am, therefore, of the opinion that the Board of Supervisors of each county in the State should appoint Road Trustees to fill the vacancies in that office which will exist when the act under consideration goes into effect, subject to the provisions of Section 19, that no person shall be appointed to fill any vacancy except upon petition signed by at least ten electors of the district; provided, that a vacancy may be filled in any case upon petition signed by a majority of the electors of the district.' I am further of the opinion that at the earliest day possible the validity of such appointment should be tested in the courts."

Paralyzed for Years

A CARPENTER SPENDS MANY MONTHS IN BED—PHYSICIANS DO HIM LITTLE GOOD.

PARALYSIS CAME FROM A FALL.

From the Express, Los Angeles, California.

Just think of a busy, hardworking man paralyzed in the midst of his career, and rendered useless.

That was the misfortune that befell James A. Jones, of 1002 Alpine street, Los Angeles, Cal., in September, 1891. Mr. Jones was born in the state where many of the presidents come from—Ohio, but spent the greater part of his life during his younger years in Iowa, from which place he went to Colorado, and in 1882 came to Los Angeles. It was a small place then, before the boom came along and pushed us forward a century in the road of progress, and Mr. Jones followed his occupation of carpenter and builder. While at work in September, 1891, he received a fall which jarred him considerably and he became confined to his bed. Shortly after he lost the use of the lower part of his body entirely, and his legs became a dead weight. A plaster cast was put upon him by the doctors and they worked over him and did all things possible to assist his recovery. But he remained in the same condition.

In April, 1893, he began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. The following June he noticed that he could move his toes, and on July 4, 1893, he got up out of bed and later in the month was able to walk without crutches. Shortly after, still continuing the pills, he went to work at his trade at Whittier, where he sustained a fall and again injured himself and had to go to bed, and the dread paralysis came on again. Again the doctors worked with him, but without relief, and he once more began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The doctors had given him bromides and iodides, but without effect. Again the pills drove the paralysis into the background. He said, "I took them in accordance with directions, and in connection with the use of cold sponge baths, found they were exceedingly beneficial.

Mr. Jones is now able to walk again, and he feels that the pills are the only thing that has done him any good. In this connection he said: "The doctors who have treated me have done everything in their power, but without effect, and it does seem marvelous that paralysis should be overcome by these little pills. But that has been my experience. If anyone doubts it, let them write to me or come and see me, and I will tell them the story."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Costumes of the Spreewald.

Consul General De Kay writes a paper entitled "An Inland Venice" for The Century. It is a description of life in the Serbian swamp, Vendland. Mr. De Kay says: "School out" at the village school of Burg is a pretty sight. The substantial brick building overlooks the ever murmuring highway, and the boys and girls, instead of stringing up a dusty road, tumble into punts and pole away for dear life—the boys much like other boys, but the girls reduced facsimiles of their mothers and elder sisters, clad in bright but short raiment and visible afar off through their strange mob caps with wings. As one moves down stream from Burg by Leipe to Lubbenau, these wings grow smaller and collapse, while the skirts grow longer and more resemble the ordinary dress of women. At a dance the Spreewalder knows instantly, by the peculiarities of her costume, from what village a woman or girl has come. At Leipe the multitudinous skirts of alarming girth are no more. The gown reaches the ankles, and the cap fits close to the head instead of resting on a framework as in Burg. Thus the dress in Leipe is perhaps more graceful, but it is more commonplace. It no longer testifies to that pride of the peasant father or husband which is shown by the number of yards in the skirts of his woman folk and the variety of their caps, by the richness of their dress as well as their jewelry.

ANCIENT WATER HEATERS.

People Two Thousand Years Ago Had Some Practical Conveniences.

In two of the museums of old Roman antiquities at Naples there are several water heaters, which indicate that the principle of the water tube, the crowning feature of modern boilers, was fully understood and appreciated some 2,000 years ago. Mr. W. T. Bonner of Cincinnati has been investigating these heaters and found them to be as interesting as they are beautiful. One of them consists of an outer shell 12 inches in diameter and nearly 17 inches high, surmounted by a somewhat hemispherically shaped top. Inside this shell is an internal cylinder, also having a hemispherical top, which is 10 inches in diameter and 12 inches high. The two shells are connected at the bottom by a rim, like the mud ring of a locomotive firebox, and the space between them was filled with water. The grate was formed of seven tubes made from sheet bronze, rolled and soldered or brazed. These tubes open at both ends into the bottom of the space between the shells, thus forming a water tube grate for the fuel to rest upon.

Charcoal was probably used with this heater and was placed on the grate through an opening 4.8 inches high and 4 inches wide, closed by a beautifully decorated door. The gases from the fire escaped into the outer air through three small openings formed by tubes crossing from the inner to the outer shell about 5.6 inches above the grate. The whole apparatus was raised about 12 inches on a tripod so as to allow air to reach the fuel. In another boiler of somewhat the same type the outer shell has the form of an urn, while the inner shell rises from a water tube grate to an opening in the side. It is 12 inches in diameter at the widest part, 17.6 inches high and supported on a tripod about 4 inches high. Its general shape is much like that of the silver cream pitchers known as the Paul Revere patterns, although, of course, it is much larger and has a top closed by a lid. It has been suggested that these utensils may have served at some time to heat wine as well as water, which suggestion appears reasonable, as many historians state that the Pompeiians made great use of hot drinks. It may be that they were found in one of the termpodi or cafes, of which there were several in Pompeii.—Boston Transcript.

FRENCH ARMY AND NAVY.

England's Traditional Enemy Not Behind Her In Armament.

The French navy ranks next to that of England in numbers, while in efficiency and fighting qualities the French ships are fully equal to their English rivals. In fact, in naval architecture the French early took the lead, and many of the English types of ships were modeled after the French designs, says The Chautauquan. One of the chief differences between the English and the French armored ships today is in the disposition of the armor and the consequent design of the hull. English designers have striven to protect the men working the guns, and to do this they have reduced the length of the ship's armor. French and naval architects, on the other hand, have given little attention to the protection of men and a great deal to the protection of the water line. Therefore they have reduced the breadth of the ship's armor.

It is worthy of note that France is the only great power which levies a tax on such of her citizens as either do not enlist in the standing army or who enlist for a shorter term than three years. Only those who are officially declared "impecunious" are exempt from such a tax. It is payable annually as long as the liability to service lasts, and the revenue from this source amounts to about 30,000,000 francs, or $6,000,000, annually.

The officers of the French army receive a very thorough education at the different military schools. At the head of these (although not exclusively military) stands the Polytechnic school in Paris, which admits 150 pupils annually after a competitive examination. The course occupies nine months in the year for two years.

As it is impossible to keep under arms for three years the entire annual contingent of recruits, the law provides for the discharge of thoroughly trained men at the end of the first or second year of active service in such proportions as to bring down the peace strength of the army to the number annually determined upon by the general assembly. Preferences in this connection are decided by lot. For this purpose every recruit at his enrollment draws a number, and only those having the highest numbers are entitled to consideration.

RATTLED.

To make a mad dog to order, tie a tin pan to his tail. A man made mad is one who, after suffering 10, 15, 20 years with rheumatism, finds that by the use of a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil he is cured. He feels the waste of his life in pain, with the loss of time, place and money, and then reflects that for the expense of 50c. he could have saved all this and lived free of pain; it is enough to make him mad. Most of our sufferings are intensified by delay in seeking relief, and there is much worth knowing as regards the cure of pain that we find out at last only by the use of the best cure. It is worth knowing that for the cure of rheumatism there is special virtue in The Great Remedy for Pain, St. Jacobs Oil, and as so much can be saved by its use, the cost is really nothing.

"Young Higginside married, you say, on $10 a week? That took nerve, anyhow. What was he working at?" "Nothing. It was the girl who was earning the $10."

The Great Brown-Pericord Motor

By CONAN DOYLE.

[Copyright, 1895, by the Author.]

Pericord said nothing, but his face glowed with pride and expectation.

"We must have something to eat," Brown remarked, laying out some provisions which he had brought with him.

"Afterward."

"No, now," said the stolid mechanician. "I am half starved." He pulled up to the table and made a hearty meal, while his Celtic companion strode impatiently up and down with twitching fingers and restless eyes.

"Now, then," said Brown, facing round and brushing the crumbs from his lap, "who is to put it on?"

"I shall," cried his companion eagerly. "What we do tonight is likely to be historic."

"But there is some danger," suggested Brown. "We cannot quite tell how it may act."

"That is nothing," said Pericord, with a wave of his hand.

"But there is no use in our going out of our way to incur danger."

"What then? One of us must do it."

"Not at all. The motor would act equally well if attached to any inanimate object."

"That is true," said Pericord thoughtfully.

"There are bricks by the barn. I have a sack here. Why should not a bagful of them take your place?"

"It is a good idea. I see no objection."

"Come on, then," and the two sallied out, bearing with them the various sections of their machine. The moon was shining cold and clear, though an occasional ragged cloud drifted across her face. All was still and silent upon the downs. They stood and listened before they entered the barn, but not a sound came to their ears, save the dull murmur of the sea and the distant barking of a dog. Pericord journeyed backward and forward with all that they might need, while Brown filled a long narrow sack with bricks.

When all was ready, the door of the barn was closed and the lamp balanced upon an empty packing case. The bag of bricks was laid upon two trestles, and the broad steel girdle was buckled round it. Then the great phlanges, the wires and the metal box containing the motor were in turn attached to the girdle. Last of all a flat steel rudder shaped like a fish's tail was secured to the bottom of the sack.

"We must make it go round in a small circle," said Pericord, glancing round at the bare, high walls.

"Tie the rudder down at one side," suggested Brown. "Now it is ready. Press the connection, and off she goes."

Pericord leaned forward, his long sallow face quivering with excitement. His white, nervous hands darted here and there among the wires. Brown stood impassive, with critical eyes. There was a sharp bur from the machine. The huge yellow wings gave a convulsive flap; then another; then a third, slower and stronger, with a fuller sweep; then a fourth, which filled the barn with a blast of driven air. At the fifth the bag of bricks began to dance upon the trestles. At the sixth it sprang into the air and would have fallen to the ground, but the seventh came in time to save it and fluttered forward through the air. Slowly rising, it flapped heavily round in a circle, like some great clumsy bird, filling the barn with its buzzing and whirring. In the uncertain yellow light of the single lamp it was strange to see the loom of the ungainly thing flapping off into the shadows and then circling back into the narrow zone of light.

Pericord watched it with a white, drawn face.

The two men stood for awhile in silence. Then Pericord threw his long arms up into the air. "It acts!" he cried. "The Brown-Pericord motor acts!" He danced about like a madman in his delight. Brown's eyes twinkled, and he began to whistle.

"See how smoothly it goes, Brown!" cried the inventor. "And the rudder—how well it acts! We must register it tomorrow."

His comrade's face darkened and set. "It is registered," he said, with a forced laugh.

"Registered!" said Pericord. "Registered!" He repeated the word first in a whisper and then in a kind of scream. "Who has dared to register my invention?"

"I did it this morning. There is nothing to be excited about. It is all right."

"You registered the motor? Under whose name?"

"Under my own," said Brown sullenly. "I consider that I have the best right to it."

"And my name does not appear?"

"No, but"—

"You villain!" screamed Pericord. "You thief and villain! You would steal my work! You would filch my credit! I will have that patent back if I have to tear your throat out." A somber fire burned in his black eyes, and his hands writhed themselves together with passion. Brown was no coward, but he shrank back as the other advanced upon him.

"Keep your hands off," he said, drawing a knife from his pocket. "I will defend myself if you attack me."

"You threaten me!" cried Pericord, whose face was livid with anger. "You are a bully as well as a cheat. Will you give up the patent?"

"No, I will not."

"Brown, I say, give it up."

"I will not. I did the work."

Pericord sprang madly forward, with blazing eyes and clutching fingers. His companion writhed out of his grasp, but dashed against the packing case, over which he fell. The lamp was extinguished and the whole barn plunged into darkness. A single ray of moonlight, shining through a narrow chink, flickered over the great waving fans as they came and went.

"Will you give up the patent, Brown?"

There was no answer. "Will you give it up?" Again no answer. Not a sound save the humming and creaking overhead. A cold pang of fear and doubt struck through Pericord's heart. He felt aimlessly about in the dark, and his fingers closed upon a hand. It was cold and unresponsive. With all his anger turned to icy horror, he struck a match, set the lamp up and lit it.

Brown lay huddled up upon the other side of the packing case. Pericord seized him in his arms, and with convulsive strength lifted him across. Then the mystery of his silence was explained. He had fallen with his right arm doubled up under him, and his own weight had driven the knife deeply into his body. He had died without a groan. The tragedy had been sudden, horrible and complete.

Pericord sat silently on the edge of the case, staring blankly down and shivering like one with the ague, while the great Brown-Pericord motor boomed and hurtled above him. How long he sat there can never be known. It might have been minutes, or it might have been hours. A thousand mad schemes flashed through his dazed brain. It was true that he had been only the indirect cause. But who would believe that? He glanced down at his blood spattered clothing. Everything was against him. It would be better to fly than to give himself up, relying upon his innocence. No one in London knew where they were. If he could dispose of the body, he might have a few days clear before any suspicion would be aroused.

Suddenly a loud crash recalled him to himself. The flying sack had gradually risen with each successive circle until it had struck against the rafters. The blow displaced the connecting gear, and the machine fell heavily to the ground. Pericord undid the girdle. The motor was uninjured. A sudden strange thought flashed upon him as he looked at it. The machine had become hateful to him. He might dispose both of it and the body in a way that would baffle all human search.

He threw open the barndoor and carried his companion out into the moonlight. There was a hillock outside, and on the summit of this he laid him reverently down. Then he brought from the barn the motor, the girdle and the phlanges. With trembling fingers he fastened the broad steel belt round the dead man's waist. Then he screwed the wings into the sockets. Beneath he slung the motor box, fastened the wires and switched on the connection. For a minute or two the huge yellow fans flapped and flickered. Then the body began to move in little jumps down the side of the hillock, gathering a gradual momentum until at last it heaved up into the air and soared heavily off in the moonlight. He had not used the rudder, but had turned the head for the south. Gradually the weird thing rose higher and sped faster until it had passed over the line of cliff and was sweeping over the silent sea. Pericord watched it with a white, drawn face until it looked like a black bird with golden wings half shrouded in the mist which lay over the waters.

In the New York state lunatic asylum there is a wild eyed man whose name and birthplace are alike unknown. His reason has been unseated by some sudden shock, the doctors say, though of what nature they are unable to determine. "It is the most delicate machine which is most readily put out of gear," they remark and point in proof of their axiom to the complicated electric engines and remarkable aeronautic machines which the patient is fond of devising in his more lucid moments.

THE END.

How the Heavens Move.

According to the elder Struve, the movement of the sun through space is at about the rate of five miles per second, but that calculation was made on the supposition that the brightest of the fixed stars were between two and three times nearer us than they have been since proved to be. The best astronomers of more modern times are of the opinion that the actual speed of the solar system in its wild flight through space can scarcely fall short of 12 or exceed 20 miles per second. By a moderate estimate, then, our position in the great sea of space is changing at the rate of 500,000,000 miles annually. The above figures, wonderful as they may seem, are counterbalanced by the enormous distances which separate the fixed stars from the planets of our solar system as well as by the unthinkable and measureless space which intervenes between those distant orbs. Let us suppose that our sun and his train of planets and satellites are getting ready to make a trip to Sirius, the dog star, and that that body is anchored perfectly stationary in space. Suppose that we begin our trip on Jan. 1, 1895, when will we come in collision with the ruler of dogdays? Not until after a lapse of 50,000 years! And we are traveling 500,000,000 of miles annually too!—St. Louis Republic.

Boiling Springs.

On the premises of Dr. Lane, at Portland, Or., is a well that yields water "a thousand times hotter than boiling."

At Pine Grove, Esmeralda county, Nev., there is a well, drilled in 1888, which furnished water for the miners to do their cooking with. Potatoes placed in the stone basin at the well will cook through and through in eight minutes.

The water of one of the artesian wells at Budapest has an average temperature of 200 degrees and flows at the rate of 175,000 gallons every 12 hours.

At Ritzia, Australia, there is a boiling spring which Professor Hilden avers is inhabited by millions of small red fish. If these little hot water denizens be scooped from their natural element and placed in a pail of common drinking water, they die instantly, and the queer part of the story is that the scales and skin slip off just as though they had been scalded.—Exchange.

MODJESKA THE GRAND.

Found Paine's Celery Compound the Best of Remedies.

For the Nervous Exhaustion Consequent Upon Her Arduous Work—The Remarkable Artiste Who Stands Pre-Eminently at the Head of Her Profession.

The news of Modjeska's recovery from the recent severe sickness that compelled her to leave the stage will be a source of congratulation to the whole world.

Modjeska, in a letter to Wells, Richardson & Company, says she has found (what thousands of people in every station of life have so often heartily testified) that Paine's celery compound is the very best of all remedies for nervous exhaustion.

Joseph Haworth rightly calls Modjeska "the peerless queen of artistes."

Modjeska's health is a matter of world-wide interest, and her testimonial to the value of the great remedy which makes people well is of particular moment in the early spring, when from every quarter reports come of men, women and children who are taking Paine's celery compound, and are gaining in nervous vigor, weight and every other indication of better health.

The thoughtful portion of the community knows the need of purifying the blood and regulating the nervous and alimentary systems as spring comes on.

There is the danger that in their eagerness to take a spring remedy a thoughtless person may carry home some bogus concoction prepared with only such a smattering of medical knowledge as can be picked up behind a counter.

Paine's celery compound is prepared in exact accordance with the prescription of Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., of Dartmouth college. Its curative effects have been closely watched by the ablest physicians of every school, and they are today agreed that it stands alone as the reliable remedy for building up a person's health in the spring.

The most overwhelming testimony to the value of Paine's celery compound that has recently appeared from men and women of national reputation:

Hon. George B. Swift, mayor of Chicago;

Francis Murphy, the foremost apostle of temperance in the world;

Mrs. Matthew S. Quay, wife of the great Republican senator from Pennsylvania;

Ex-President Cook of the National Teacher' Association.

Rev. Charles L. Thompson, D.D., the brilliant Presbyterian leader of New York city;

Elizabeth Cady Stanton;

Secretary Carlisle's private secretary;

State Treasurer Addison B. Colvin of New York;

John Graham, the foremost man in American athletics;

The wife of Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, the famous preacher and reformer, Mayor McShane of Montreal, Major General Birney, Judge Powers of Vermont, and a host more of prominent men and women, including no less than five U. S. congressmen, are among the thousands of grateful people who have recently sent to the proprietors of this wonderful remedy their expressions of its unequaled value—men and women who can well afford, and do command, the highest medical advice in the country.

And then also from the people in the ordinary walks of life there come thousands of honest, straightforward, heartfelt letters, telling how Paine's celery compound has made them well.

Their testimony simply goes to show what New England's most vigorous editor so aptly said in a letter telling of the benefit Paine's celery compound had been to a member of his family; "Paine's celery compound is not a patent medicine; it is not a sarsaparilla; it is not a mere tonic; it is not an ordinary nervine—it is as far beyond them all as the diamond is superior to cheap glass."

It makes people well. It is the one true specific recognized and prescribed today by eminent practitioners for diseases arising from a debilitated nervous system. Prof. Phelps gave to his profession a positive cure for sleeplessness, wasting strength, dyspepsia, biliousness, liver complaint, neuralgia, rheumatism, all nervous diseases and kidney troubles. For all such complaints Paine's celery compound has succeeded again and again, where everything else has failed.

When Modjeska in a letter published in Boston said: "I have found Paine's celery compound the very best of all remedies for the nervous exhaustion consequent upon the arduous work of my profession," she voiced the experience of every tired-out, run-down, exhausted woman whoever went to this greatest of all spring remedies for relief.

No one ever yet failed to find strength and health returning who faithfully used nature's true remedy—Paine's celery compound.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

CHEAP IRRIGATION.

The Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, Cal., the largest builders of gas, gasoline and oil engines on the Coast, are making extensive preparations for the season's business.

They are filling several orders for large irrigating plants and as this line of their business increases each season, it is safe to say the farmers throughout the State are appreciating the advantages of irrigation with water pumped by this cheap power.

The Hercules Works are at present building an 80 H. P. engine for Geo. F. Packer, Colusa, which will raise 6000 gallons per minute from the river and distribute it over his land. This will be the largest gasoline pumping plant in existence.

THE CHAFING DISH.

Oh, ye bachelors, a-wooing maidens fair and fortune's maid,
After dance and dim flirtation and the proper promenade,
If her heart you fain would capture and

Just display your lordly knowledge of the mystic chafing dish.

Gently hint that you're a gourmet of a palate hard to suit,
And disparage old Lucullus and some other chaps to boot,
Then prepare a dainty rarebit with an air of unconcern,
And there may be millions in it—if you've done it to a turn.

Love hath naught of sweet persuasion

And I'll imitate a motto, when you've caught this gentle fish,
Quite an up-to-date escutcheon—"Heaven

ROMANCE OF A HOSPITAL NURSE.

"And so," I observed to Miss Wreford-Brown, "you like your new life?"

"I am delighted with it," she said.

"Ah!" I said, "I rejoice to hear that you have altered your mind. A month ago, if I recollect right, your mother informed me that the duties you had to perform were injuring your health to such a degree that you seriously thought of leaving St. Matthew's hospital. However, the lapse of another month seems to have altered the complexion of matters."

"A little," murmured Miss Winifred, gently stirring her coffee.

I noticed that she smiled as she made this reply.

"In my opinion," I said, "nursing is the noblest of all professions legitimately open to women. I cannot imagine anything grander than the death-bed scene of an aged sister—the head nurse of each ward is caller 'sister,' is she not?—who, drawing her last feeble breaths, murmurs to those around her: 'For fifty years I have been tending the sick, and keeping an eye on the more giddy of the probationers when medical students were present. I have done my work, requiescat in pace!' Ah! what a glorious demise is there!"

If you believe me, Miss Winifred actually giggled.

"I am not," I said sternly, "jesting to you. I am sorry that I have not aroused your sense of the ridiculous. You do not appreciate such pathetic moments—you are but 19."

"Twenty, Mr. Wormholt, please."

"Well," I returned, "twenty, then. But," I continued, "I was about to observe—as touching the career which, in opposition to the wishes of your family, you have seen fit to adopt—that a hospital has endless claims upon the sympathy of all, is worthy of our fullest gratitude and esteem. For think—does she not give up the world? Does she not relegate herself to an atmosphere of suffering—to the depressing surroundings of the sickroom? Does she not cut herself off from all the pleasures—such as they are—that a social life offers to those who care to seek them? Is not nursing a life of self-denial, of wearing vigils? A trying tax on the patience? A sure test of courage? Yea! it is all these and more, Miss Winifred, I honor you and your truly noble profession!"

"Thank you," said Miss Winifred.

It was the after-dinner period. We were sitting in a dim corner. Mrs. Wreford-Brown was chatting, in somewhat raised tones, to her neighbor, a retired Anglo-Indian colonel.

Pausing in my rhetoric, Mrs. Wreford-Brown's words came plainly to my ear. She was evidently discussing her daughter. The one by my side—for there were three others.

"The poor child," the good lady was saying, "is worked dreadfully hard. She hardly ever gets out for even half a day. Indeed, this is the first night she has been off duty for a month."

The Anglo-Indian glared fiercely in our direction. He found me leaning back in a cheerfully meditative mood. Miss Winifred put down her cap and took up a volume of political cartoons which was lying conveniently at hand.

Perhaps she overheard her mother's speech. Perhaps she fancied I did. At any rate she began to draw my attention to the first cartoon most assiduously.

"Do look at this, Mr. Wormholt," she said, laughing—in a palpably forced way—"isn't it funny?"

"A drawing," I said, "which represents a distinguished cabinet minister in the costume of a lady of the ballet cannot very well help being—er—funny. But I was speaking of hospitals—of the confined and restricted life which the nurses live, and of the unfeeling manner in which the authorities debar the nurses from enjoying even the simplest pleasures—judging, that is to say, from the representations which the ladies themselves make to their own families," I concluded, shooting a keen glance at Miss Winifred's by no means unattractive profile.

"It is comforting to know," I heard Mrs. Wreford-Brown say, "that the child is absolutely trustworthy. At hospitals, you know, there are——"

"Oh, Mr. Wormholt, just look at this!" exclaimed Miss Winifred.

"The undignified attitude in which the premier is represented," I said, "does not amuse me in the least. I have no objections to comic draughtsmanship," I went on, "but when a right honorable gentleman is drawn in the guise of a monkey dancing on the top of a barrel organ, I think it is time for a censor of cartoons to be appointed."

For reasons of my own, however, I had to turn my face away from Miss Winifred's inquiring gaze. I remembered, then, that I had brought the volume of cartoons to the house and explained them to Miss Wreford-Brown herself (mine—I mean the one I was conversing with now).

"And if——" came from Mrs. Wreford-Brown's part of the room, "the nurses allow attentions to be paid to them——"

The conclusion of this utterance was drowned by the general buzz of conversation.

"The other night," I said to Miss Winifred, "I went to 'Rosemary.'"

"Indeed," she replied, and turned over the cartoons more rapidly than ever.

"A very well written and attractive piece," I continued.

"Yes," said Miss Winifred, "I've heard——"

"Agatha," said Mrs. Wreford-Brown to her eldest daughter, "won't you sing?"

"Oh, do, Agatha," said the second girl (rather wickedly as it struck me). "Give us 'Resignation.'"

"Oh, I can accompany that!" exclaimed Miss Winifred, starting up.

"Thank you," said Miss Agatha, coldly, "but I prefer to accompany myself."

So Miss Winifred was obliged to resume her seat by my side, and Miss Agatha proceeded to oblige us with the dirge in question. When the polite applause which greeted (a very proper expression) its conclusion had ceased, I said to Miss Winifred:

"I sat in the dress circle."

Miss Winifred buried her eyes with the cartoons.

"In the dress circle," I went on, "at the back——"

"Who is this meant to be——"

"Where I had an excellent view not only of the stage, but also of the other occupants—(I dwelt on the words)—of the seats in that part of the house."

I waited for her remark, but there came only a rustle of leaves.

"Yes," I said, "the profession of nursing is an honorable profession—a profession of self-denial—a calling which debars its followers from enjoying many pleasures of life. We enjoyed 'Rosemary' very much."

"But," said Miss Winifred, looking up from the cartoons, "I thought you went by yourself."

"Who told you I did?" I asked, suspiciously.

"—Nice, gentlemanly fellows, many of them, but, of course——" came from Mrs. Wreford-Brown. I did not hear the rest of the sentence.

"Oh, I—I always thought you went alone," was Miss Winifred's weak rejoinder.

"I see. Well, you are right. I was alone. But 'we' refers to myself and all the other people in the dress circle. I like to speak of my fellow beings in a broad, kindly, unselfish sense like that. And I felt—I felt grieved!"

"What about?" asked Miss Winifred.

"Grieved," I said, "to think that you, Miss Winifred, only get one night off in a month. I felt that it was selfish of me to enjoy 'Rosemary' when you were watching by the sick and dying——"

"—Perfectly straightforward, truthful girl," came from Mrs. Wreford-Brown, "in whom I have the utmost confidence. Some girls placed in her position would——"

"Is this meant to be the chancellor of the exchequer?" asked Miss Winifred, quickly.

"The man," I said, "selling the dreadful commodity known as—excuse me for mentioning it—dried haddock, is the first lord of the treasury, but the cat which is rubbing itself against his legs is, as you suppose, that great statesman, the——"

"—Think for a moment that my dear child allowed even a house surgeon to pay her——" was wafted from the maternal lips over to our corner.

"—Chancellor of the exchequer!" I concluded with disgust.

"I saw a man there that I knew," I whispered to Miss Winifred. She nodded and, I think, breathed more freely.

"I have reason to believe," I whispered, still more confidentially, "that he is a member of the medical profession. I think he is at some——"

Crash, went the bass notes. Whish! went the leaves of the cartoon book.

"——some hospital!"

"Mamma," cried Miss Winifred, jumping up (I do not like to say bounding up), "it's time for me to be——"

"Sh-h-h!" came from the eldest Miss Wreford-Brown, in a vicious hiss.

Miss Winifred sat down again—reluctantly. Once more she buried herself in the cartoons.

"I have heard," I continued, "that he is on the indoor staff——"

"Is this Morley?" demanded Miss Winifred, quite loudly.

"Winifred," came from the eldest Miss Wreford-Brown, in an angry snap.

"That," I whispered, "is Mr. Morley. The master who is flogging him is the minister of agriculture."

The music went on. I beat time for a minute with my hand, and then, bending close to Miss Winifred's ear again, observed:

"He was with two members of the honorable profession of which I have been speaking. The member sitting by him—the less repulsive-looking of the two, that is——"

The pianist was playing the last chords. Miss Winifred shut the cartoon book with a bang.

"—— had," I concluded, speaking very hurriedly, "brown eyes, darkish hair, rather dimpled chin——"

Crash!!! and the musical operation had been brought to a gratifying termination.

"And so, colonel, you see," came in Mrs. Wreford-Brown's voice, clear as a bell, through the silence which followed the finishing of the music, "I have every confidence in my dear child. Thank you, Miranda. Time for you to go, Winifred? You seem to have been having a very entertaining time, you and Mr. Wormholt, with that book of cartoons."

"Extremely entertaining," I said. But of course I spoke only for myself.—Westminster Gazette.

An Improved Cow Stall.

I herewith inclose a sketch of my form of cow stall. In many respects it is similar to those of my neighbors, while in some features I think it an improvement. The breast-board directly under the cow's neck is made shallow (six inches), while at the ends it is made wide so that the cut feed cannot be so easily rooted out by the cows.

The front, which also serves the purpose of rack, is made of No. 9 wire, except a single two by eight oak scantling, which runs horizontally with the wires about three feet from the floor with five wires equally spaced below and three above scantling. The wire should be made tense by using on each wire a ratchet. The scantling should be blocked out two-thirds of its width and let in on each post, which will serve as a stay or brace when drawing the wires.

The tie-chain plays on a vertical five-eighths-inch iron rod, which runs from the horizontal scantling to the bottom of the trough, one-half inch from wires, and is fastened with staple at top, and auger hole at bottom. This is much better than fastening at side of stall. The cow can lie on either side, can lick herself, or lie with her head on her side and still be unable to get far from her proper place. The best fastening is a strap left permanently about the cow's neck with a ring sewed on strap. Then with a snap on the end of chain, one can fasten or unfasten the cows from the adjoining stall.—R. E. Roberts, in Ohio Farmer.

Brooler for Late Chicks.

The late hatch of the incubator or of a half-dozen hens can be put into such a brooder as is shown herewith. It is a cheese box, with sliding door and ventilating holes, as seen in the sketch. For late broods but little heat is needed. Have a lard pail and fill it with boiling water, and wrap closely in a piece of felt or flannel. This will keep warm all night and the chicks will contentedly encircle it. Even if they get a bit cold on any night there are no corners to crowd into with disastrous results.—Orange Judd Farmer.

A Defense of Cash Rent.

There is a great outcry among farm renters against cash rents just now, says the Fort Dodge Messenger, but the system of cash rents is a better one for both tenants and landlords than a system of grain rents. The cash rents are sometimes too high, but it would be better for the landlord to reduce them than to go back to grain rent. That means no stock and everything to be sold off the place. It is the wrong system of farming for Iowa. There should be stock on the place to save the rough feed, which on a grain rented farm goes entirely to waste. Farming in that fashion cannot pay and ought not to pay, for it is a crime against bountiful nature to waste her offerings to man.

A Nebraska Experiment Farm.

The Frontier, of O'Neill, Neb., says that O'Neill will have an experiment farm this season for the purpose of thoroughly testing the Campbell method of soil culture. "A couple of our citizens were around town last week," the Frontier says, "and raised $100 with which to purchase machinery to cultivate crops under this method. A contract has been entered into with John Kelly Jr., who will cultivate fifty acres under the direction of an overseer. He will also cultivate fifty acres, on land adjoining, using the system now in vogue in this county. This experimental farm will be watched with interest by farmers in this section."

Good Luck with Hogs.

A farmer of Clay County, South Dakota, has had remarkably good luck with hogs the past season, while all around him his neighbors have been losing their swine in great numbers from cholera, while this man has not lost one. He attributes his success to alfalfa, which he feeds the year round. Early in the spring he sows a fifteen-acre lot to this grain and lets it grow to a height of a foot or more, when the hogs are turned in. Another field is sown for winter use, which is cut and fed like so much hay. It acts like a tonic and is a great laxative.

Beautify the Farm.

Make the farm as attractive as your means will allow. The farm that is improved by straight, neat fences, the fence rows free of briars and weeds, with a stolid stone road leading in from the pike, will sell for more money, if it has to be sold; and if kept in the family will add much to the comfort and happiness of all its members. Every improvement put on the place will make the children more contented with home, and give them larger and better ideas of life. Money should not be made the one great aim; it is only a means to accomplish an end; that is, to make more out of life.

Remove the rubbish from around the dwelling, and if it needs it, make a drain to carry off the slop water from the back yard. Spread a thin coat of manure over the grass in front of the house; trim up the trees and bushes, and whitewash the fence surrounding the house. These are little things, and can be done at odd times, when the ground is too wet to plow, or when an hour or so can be spared from other work. Make it an object to beautify the place, and it will be done. A few apple, pear, peach and plum trees should be planted out in the garden every spring. Plant in rows thirty feet apart, and set the trees twenty feet apart in the row. Have a few rows of strawberries, raspberries, currants and blackberries. They are as easy to raise as corn or potatoes, and four times more profitable. If a farmer has a good vegetable and fruit garden, with a good-sized poultry yard, he can live without going often to the store. Two or three sugar maples, white poplars, or a tree or two of the American linden, planted in groups of three or five, in front of the dwelling, will be a great addition. Do not attempt too much; lay off in your mind what can be done, and then push it through. Name your farm, and paint it on your gate.

Investigation of Corn.

The Iowa Agricultural College is undertaking some investigations concerning the germination of corn, oats and wheat. They desire to test not only the germinative energy but to get all the information they can concerning the time of harvesting, how kept during the winter, on what kind of soil it was planted last year, and whether collected before or after frost. They request all who are willing to send samples as soon as possible so that their results may be more general. Send not only last year's corn, but that of the year before, and by all means give them the name of the variety. They will make a report in ten or twelve days.

Clover Hay.

Clover hay is much better appreciated than it used to be. While most horsemen in the city are still shy of it, the farmers know, as they always have done, that in nutritious value it far surpasses timothy or other grasses. It contains more nitrogenous nutrition than the grasses. This is what makes it hard to cure without turning dark colored, but the late clover crop, which is always nearly black when got into the barn, is for sheep, cows and calves the best hay of all.—Massachusetts Plowman.

The Best Way to Begin.

The best way to enter the poultry business is to begin with a small flock, and gradually enlarge, the object being to learn and also to breed for the kind of fowls desired. No one can succeed who goes on the market and buys his hens, of all sizes, breeds and characteristics, for he will know nothing of them, and may lose all from disease or inferiority of the stock. By breeding his stock he gets those best suited to the objects desired.

Sheep Losing Their Wool.

Whenever a sheep begins to lose wool it shows its digestion has become impaired, causing fever. In most cases this means that the sheep is past its prime, so that it can no longer chew its food as formerly. The sooner such a sheep is disposed of, the better for the farmer's profit. It is not possible even by feeding ensilage to keep sheep in good condition after their teeth fail.

Dickens and the X Rays.

An amusing instance of anticipation of the penetrating character of the so-called X rays, according to an exchange, has been discovered in a most unlikely place, i. e., in Dickens' "Christmas Carol." It will be remembered that when the miser Scrooge sees the ghost of his former partner Marley entering the room, Marley's body appears to be transparent, so that Scrooge can see clear through him and discern the two buttons on the back of his coat. It may be presumed that Marley wore the old-time blue coat with brass buttons, and that flesh and blood became transparent when metal buttons would not. It is now in order for the Society for Psychical Research to try the X rays for the detection of ghosts, but if they are successful they must give the credit to Dickens.—Electrical Review.

ARMY OF EMPLOYES.

178,717 Persons Draw Salaries from the National Treasury.

The Civil Service Commission has prepared a report showing that there are 178,717 people in the employ of Uncle Samuel, not including those in the military and naval service, and that they receive as compensation for their services annually the enormous sum of $99,589,827. Of the total number of persons employed in the civil service 91,609 are unclassified and are not subject to examinations for appointment. The total number in the classified service, who cannot be discharged without good cause and cannot be appointed without competitive examination, is 87,108. Of the classified service 4,120 are examining surgeons for pensions. The remainder are divided by salaries as follows:

$720 or less	19,745
$840 or less	8,617
$900 or less	1,666
$1,000 or less	10,605
$1,200 or less	18,179
$1,400 or less	6,770
$1,600 or less	4,701
$1,800 or less	1,563
$2,000 or less	1,570
$2,500 or less	1,131
More than $2,500	510

The unclassified service consists of 66,725 fourth-class postmasters, 8,850 laborers, 5,570 persons whose salaries average less than $300 annually, 4,230 clerks in second, third and fourth class postoffices, 2,061 Indians and 4,818 persons whose appointments are confirmed by the Senate. In addition to these are private secretaries and confidential clerks, cashiers in customs and postoffices, deputy collectors of customs and internal revenue, deputy postmasters, marshals, attorneys and assistant attorneys, employes in the quartermaster's department of the army, custodians of military reservations, clerks in Congress and in the library of Congress, commissioners of various kinds, special agents, superintendents of national cemeteries, etc., amounting in all to about 700.

The following table shows the division of the employes of the government under the various departments, and the total compensation paid to each department:

Antique Piano.

Landlord Carey J. King, of the Hotel Safford, has on exhibition at the hotel office quite a curiosity in the way of an old piano. Mr. King says that it is probably the oldest piano in this country. It is the property of his wife, and came into the possession of her family away back in the closing years of the eighteenth century, when it was purchased of the family of Governor John Sevier, of Tennessee, for the great-grandmother of Mrs. King. The piano was made for Governor Sevier by J. Stewart, of Baltimore, the Governor presenting it to his wife. It is a quaint old instrument, finely finished off in mahogany, and doubtless could tell many a romantic tale of the olden times if perchance it were gifted with the power of speech. The piano is very low, and has seven legs. The keyboard is smaller than that of the pianos of to-day, covering only five octavos.—Portsmouth (Ohio) Times.

Wealth.

Wealth is a blessing when properly used, and the mere fact of any man possessing it can by no possibility be held against him unless he came by it through dishonest or fraudulent means. One might ask with some show of reason, where would the hospitals, the infirmaries, the charitable institutions, the halls of learning and the thousand and one great interests of this country be had they not been endowed and assisted by people of means? There are many people in this country to-day who owe their education and training largely to the benevolence of those who gave of their substance to keep up the schools and colleges.

True Pleasure.

The unregulated gratification of the lower propensities is short-lived and unsatisfactory; and when the impulse of excitement is over, the moral sentiments condemn the conduct, so that no agreeable emotion arises from reflection on the past.

The indulgence of these, on the other hand, under the guidance of the moral sentiments, is pleasing at the time, and not painful on retrospection; while the direct exercise of the higher sentiments themselves and intellect affords the highest present delight, and the most lasting satisfaction in futurity.

DUKE OF LEEDS.

Will Succeed Lord Aberdeen as Governor General of Canada.

The Duke of Leeds, who will succeed Lord Aberdeen as Governor General of Canada, assumed the title and the estate of the family about a year ago on the death of his father, the ninth duke. The present duke's name is George Godolphin Osborne, and he is a second son. His elder brother died in 1861. The future Governor General is only 34 years old, but has already won a prominent name for himself in politics. He has been in parliament, where he sat for Lambeth. He was formally honored with the post of treasurer of the household, which he gave up, according to custom, when he retired from parliament. In 1884 he married Lady Katherine Francis Lambeth, a daughter of the second earl of Durham, and they have four pretty little girls. The duke, when he was in parliament as the Marquis of Carmarthen, was the youngest member in the commons and the youngest looking until he grew a beard. It is told of him that on the day of his election some one asked him: "Say, boy, does your mother know you're out?" "Yes," promptly replied the youthful politician, "and when the votes are counted to-night she will know I am in." The family of the duke—the Osbornes—is one of the oldest and most aristocratic in all the peerage. They were seated centuries ago in Kent and were distinguished lords in ancient times. The late duke had several brothers, two of whom were famous churchmen. Rev. Lord Sidney Godolphin-Osborne earned a reputation as a working philanthropist, while Rev. Lord Francis Godolphin-Osborne was noted for his extreme leaning toward ritualism. He afterward formally joined the Roman Catholic church. The duke is a popular member of the House of Lords, and his elevation to the distinguished position of Governor General of Canada is not much of a surprise to those who know the inside workings of the government. His wife is a charming woman, if not beautiful in person.

into contact with the center of the tire; the wheel operates a hand on a dial, which shows the rate of hour. If, for instance, it is 20 miles to his destination, and he pedals fast enough to hold the handle at the 20-mile mark, he will reach his destination in exactly one hour. It is both a pleasure and aid to the rider to see the various changes in speed, and is the best time-keeper going. It costs little, and weighs about 2½ ounces.

DURRANT MUST DIE.

Decision Reached by the Governor

SAN FRANCISCO, May 31.—Wm. Henry Theodore Durrant, the brutal murderer of Blanche Lamont and Minnie Williams, will be hanged by the neck until he is dead at the State Prison at San Quentin on the morning of June 11.

Yesterday afternoon Governor Budd came to this city from Sacramento, leaving his written opinion in the hands of his secretary. This morning a telegram was received from the Capitol to the effect that the document would be given out this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Durrant were notified at 10 o'clock last evening of the Governor's decision in the case of their son. They both accepted the inevitable without any scene. During the past two years they have been under such a constant strain of excitement that the determination of the chief executive not to interfere with the sentence of the law occasioned no great surprise.

Mrs. Durrant in her characteristic way, expressed her confidence in her son's innocence and then remarked that if they hanged her son she will attend the execution. "Theo shall never go to the scaffold alone," she remarked. "If they hang my boy I shall be at his side."

Yesterday Governor Budd telephoned his decision to Warden Hale at San Quentin. A few moments before the father of the murderer had been with him and had assured him that the executive would act in his behalf. Shortly after he had left, the determination of the Governor was received and was conveyed to the condemned man.

"I shall die like a man," the murderer remarked to day, "in the presence of my father and my mother, as the law gives me the liberty of inviting five relatives to attend the execution."

Under the law Warden Hale has no right to deny those invited by the condemned man to be in attendance. It has been suggested that Durrant might cheat the gallows by committing suicide. Regarding such a proposition the father of the murderer is very decided. When spoken to yesterday he denied that there is any truth in the report, and with emphasis declared that Theodore is too much of a man to resort to such a means.

The number of influential newspapers throughout the State that rejoice over the downfall of the A. P. A. movement in Stockton is a sure indication that the wave of disapproval is rising steadily against this proscriptive organization.

The caution of General Alger in beginning work at San Pedro is something very like the masterly inactivity of the supervising architect in the matter of the San Francisco postoffice. When a Federal official desires to delay public work he seldom has any difficulty in finding an excuse for his tardiness.

Pastor Gibson of Emanuel Church is taking and writing a good deal nowadays for a man who is innocent of all wrongdoing in connection with the death of Blanche Lamont and Minnie Williams. Unless he is stopped he is liable to raise a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of Durrant, whom the public has convicted of both crimes.

Ex-Senator Peffer's new scheme to have the railroads carry freight, as they do mail, at a fixed charge regardless of distance, will raise the hair of the Kansas grangers. When it gets so that a man can send a barrel of hams or a tub of butter as cheaply from Chicago to Topeka as he can from Abilene or Lawrence to the same point, Kansas producers will rise as one lion and crunch Mr. Peffer's bones. Has the venerable statesman from the Kaw fallen a victim of some grasping trust?

Corbett and his manager continue to assert that Fitzsimmons ought to grant a return fight. There never has been any "ought" about it under the rules of the ring. By those rules a pugilist is under no obligation to meet a man whom he has once defeated. From another standpoint, too, Corbett cannot with good grace ask for another chance, for, in the case of Jackson, he evaded meeting a man with whom he had fought a draw. For still another reason Fitzsimmons would be justified in ignoring Corbett in future, and the reason is that Corbett asserted after the Carson fight that Fitzsimmons won by a fluke and, worse than that, that he struck a foul blow when he (Corbett) was down. The verascope pictures show that Fitzsimmons aimed for the spot he reached and that no foul blow was struck. From a sporting standpoint Fitzsimmons has a very straight, clean record, and under the rules of the ring need not take any notice of any invitation or challenges to fight until September 17th. When that time shall come he will no doubt be ready to accommodate some aspiring ringster, and Corbett may be the one. Should Fitzsimmons reach the conclusion that there would be more money in that match than any other. One with Sharkey would draw quite a crowd; but it is very doubtful whether Sharkey will challenge Fitzsimmons, as Fitzsimmons undoubtedly beat him in the Mechanics' Pavilion, although the decision went otherwise. Any match Fitzsimmons might make would probably be welcome to the public for the Greek war is a fizzle, the Fair case is dull as ditch water, the Cuban struggle has become monotonous, and Kruger shows signs of "outwitting" the British by backing down.

ESTIMATES FOR REDEMPTION.

The following circular letter has been forwarded by Controller Colgan to each Board of Supervisors and to each County Auditor in the State:

"To the Board of Supervisors and County Auditor. Numerous inquiries have been made regarding the interest and penalties to be charged in making up estimates for redemption under the several laws covering the same, and in reply to those inquiries and for general information, I have issued this circular letter.

"On March 24, 1874 (amendments 1875-75, page 148), Section 3773 of the Political Code was amended, providing for the sale of property to the State for delinquent taxes.

"On April 1, 1876 (Statutes 1875-76, p. 637), April 1, 1878 (Statutes 1877-78, p. 951), and March 15, 1880 (Statutes 1880, p. 9), Acts were approved providing for the redemption of property sold to the State. These Acts were special in their nature, and in each case the time allowed for redemption was limited to one year from the approval of the Act.

"By an Act approved March 2, 1883 (Statutes 1883, p. 23), Section 3817 was added to the Political Code, providing for the redemption of property "at any time after the purchase thereof by the State, and before the State shall have disposed of the same," and fixing the penalty on redemption at 25 per cent. and interest interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum. By the Act of March 28, 1895, Section 3817 was amended, providing for the graduated penalties.

"In making up estimates for redemption, the Acts of April 1, 1876, April 1, 1878, and March 15, 1880, should be ignored and the following penalties and rates of interest should be observed:

"On all sales prior to March 28, 1895, 25 per cent penalty and interest at 7 per cent per annum.

"On all sales subsequent to March 28, 1895, the graduated penalties and interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum.

"That portion of my circular letter of the 10th inst. relative to the 50 per cent penalty is withdrawn and should be disregarded.

"In reply to my request for an opinion covering the question of refunding the penalties illegally collected since the amendment to Section 3817 of the Political Code, on March 28, 1895, the Attorney-General has this to say:

"'I am of the opinion that when real estate has been sold for delinquent taxes, the payment of penalties imposed by law to redeem the property from such a sale is an involuntary payment; that as the amendment to Section 3817 of the Political Code, enacted in 1895, is unconstitutional and void in so far as it provides for changes of penalties for past sales, and being a matter of which the officers had notice, therefore any amount collected by the officers under said amendment in excess of the penalties imposed by the law in force at the time of the sale, was erroneously and illegally collected, and whether paid under protest or not should be refunded to the redemptioner under Section 3804 of the Political Political Code.'

"The Attorney-General also rules as follows: "I am further of the opinion that the effect of the decision in the case of the Peralta Land & Water Co. against Shaffer, etc., is to cause redemptions from delinquent sales to be made under the law in force at the time of the sale, and where the law in force at the time of the sale provided that the County Auditor should receive a fee of $2, such fee should be taxed up against the redemptioner.'

"Boards of Supervisors and County Auditors will therefore govern themselves in accordance with the opinion of the Attorney-General quoted above."

At all points where Bryan is to speak in his trip through the State, preparations are being made to receive the leader of the reform movement in fitting manner. A Los Angeles dispatch, referring to meeting there on July 5th, says: "The Silver Republican Club is constantly at work preparing to receive Wm. Jennings Bryan, July 6th. The present plan contemplates having the visitor arrive here on Saturday, July 2d, and remain until the next Tuesday. The principal appearance of Mr. Bryan will be at a banquet given by the Silver Republicans on the evening of the 5th of July at the Pavilion, at which provision will be made for 3000 guests. The idea of inducing Mr. Bryan to come here and its successful accomplishment originates with and was carried out by this organization.

A man back East committed suicide the other day because he had asked a number of his friends to vote for McKinley, assuring them that times would be better if the Republican candidate was elected. The delay in the arrival of the "wave of prosperity" caused his conscience to hurt him so bad that he resolved to die rather than face the men whom he had asked to vote for the "advance agent of prosperity."

Trains 1 and 2 run daily. Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

Passenger trains make close connections at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R. R., which connect at Reno with east and west-bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

STAGE CONNECTIONS.

At Hawthorne, with U. S. Stage Company's daily coaches for Aurora, 26 miles; Bodie, 37 miles, and for Lundy and Bridgeport.

At Luning, 125 miles from Mound House with Gilmer, Salisbury & Co's tri-weekly stages, leaving Tuesday's Thursdays and Saturdays, at 8.00 a. m., for Downeyville, Grantsville, etc.

At Candelaria, with U. S. Stage Company's stages from Columbus, Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

At Keeler, with stages from Cerro Gordo, 6 miles, Darwin, 22 miles, and Panamint.

This road has a first-class equipment, is opening up new and most promising mining districts, farming and grazing valleys. West of Owens River Valley the Sierra Nevadas rise rapidly to an imposing height and are easy of access. A trip to Mt. Whitney, the "Nose" of the Sierras, and to the cataracts and great canons of the south fork of Kings river, offers to the tourist a new and unsurpassed region—one soon to become famous.

TO LAKE TAHOE.

A TRIP OF RARE INTEREST.

Passengers on west-bound overland trains of Central Pacific Railroad are respectfully notified that during the excursion season, commencing May 1st and closing October 1st, a delightful trip to LAKE TAHOE can be enjoyed (losing but one day in their journey) by taking the Express train of the Virginia & Truckee Railroad, leaving Reno at 7:10 a m, arriving at Carson City at 8:25 a m, where well equipped stages leave promptly for Glenbrook, Lake Tahoe, connecting with Lake Tahoe steamer for Tahoe City, there connecting with Moody & Co.'s stages for Truckee, arriving same evening, where connection is made with west-bound passenger train of Central Pacific Railroad. Through tickets, Reno to Truckee, by above route, for sale at Ticket Office, Reno, $5.00. East-bound passengers can leave Truckee early in the morning (Through Tickets for sale at Stage Office in Truckee) make the trip over the above described route, arriving at Reno same evening.

VIRGINIA CITY & THE COMSTOCK

Passengers may also take train mentioned at Reno for Virginia City, 52 miles, where an entire day may be pleasantly and profitably spent examining the famous Comstock Mines (now being worked to a perpendicular depth of 3,100 feet) with their massive hoisting and pumping machinery. Returning, see Time Table above. Round Trip Tickets for sale at Ticket Office Reno. aug3-tf

BORN.

DEARBORN—At Lone Pine, May 29, 1897, to Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Dearborn, a son.

DIED.

HUCKABY—Near Laws, Cal., May 29, 1897, James W. Huckaby, a native of California, aged 22 years.

On Sunday, June 6, religious services will be held as follows:

Lone Pine, at 11 a. m.

George's Creek, at 2:30 p. m.

Independence, at 7:30 p. m.

Subject, "What Christianity Has Done for Woman."

In treating this subject we purpose to show what was the condition of woman under Roman law, under early Teutonic sway, and under the oldest and best religions of the East, and then show how her condition has been improved by the uplifting power of Christianity.

All are cordially invited. A collection taken at the close for missions.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

SATURDAY, May 29, 1897.

Foorman vs. Coats—Filed complaint. Summons issued.

Estate of W. R. Tibbetts, deceased—Filed order appointing administrator.

Estate of John A. Hannah, deceased—Order of partial distribution.

TUESDAY, June 1, 1897.

Edwards vs. Brown—Filed complaint. Summons issued.

Edwards vs. Day—Filed default.

WEDNESDAY, June 2, 1897.

Sanders vs. Crocker—Filed default.

Ben Lusky was up from Lone Pine last Tuesday.

Wm. Mills came down from Round Valley yesterday.

Gustav Singer and his son Will were down from Alvord on Wednesday.

County Clerk Hession went to Bishop last Saturday, returning Wednesday.

Fred Edgington has gone to Long Valley for a couple of weeks' outing.

Sheriff Given left for Ballarat last Tuesday, going with a private conveyance.

J. A. Yerrington visited Keeler last Friday, in company with R. J. Laws.

S. G. Sneden Esq. came down from Bishop last Monday, returning next day.

Dick Williams came up from Olancha Wednesday and spent a couple of days in town.

Bob Blake came down from Big Pine last Monday on business in the Land Office.

Joseph M. Zorne made final proof on Wednesday on his homestead near Alvord.

Superintendent Hoskins and Harvey Edgington came over from the Reward on Wednesday.

Mrs. I. H. Mulholland and daughter and Miss Mary Mulholland spent the week at Bishop.

Tom Webb got back from Long Valley last Monday, and will return in a day or two with the second drive.

F. K. Andrews was down from Bishop early in the week on business connected with the Bell estate at Big Pine.

Governor Budd has refused to interfere in the case of S. D. Warden, sentenced to be hanged June 4th for train wrecking.

Miss Rita Church came down from Hawthorne on Monday, and is visiting with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Blair.

Charley Robinson has just finished packing thirty-two tons of ore for Julius Schroeder at the Alabamas. The ore is now being worked in an arastra.

R. Hession came down from Big Pine Wednesday, returning yesterday morning. Mr. Hession has been in ill health for some time past, and will leave for San Francisco Saturday. Mrs. D. J. Hession will accompany him.

Louis V. Olcese, P. S. Flanigan and H. Anderson were at Independence Wednesday evening, going to Bishop yesterday morning. Mr. Olcese recently sold 20,000 head of sheep, to be delivered to parties at Bishop, Messrs. Flanigan and Anderson being two of them. Mr. Flanigan owns a large number of sheep and extensive ranges in Nevada.

Hundreds of thousands have been induced to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy by reading what it has done for others, and having tested its merits for themselves are to-day its warmest friends. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Decoration Day at Bishop

The people of Bishop entered into the spirit of the day last Saturday, and as a result one of the most impressive memorial exercises was delivered at the Academy. The school children and the older people united in making the day one long to be remembered in the community. Most of the veterans of the county were present, and an old Indian who helped the whites in the stormy pioneer days was prominent in the procession. At 12:15 all marched to the cemetery, when the graves of our dead soldiers were decorated and a short exercise held. The stirring notes of fife and drum led the procession back to town, where the following programme was rendered:

Prayer ..... Chaplain
"Hail Columbia" ..... Choir
Address ..... S. E. Vermilyea Esq.
Double quartet, "Dream, Sweetly Dream" .... Miss Emma Chalfant, Miss Gertie Gunter, Mrs. C. W. Greiger, Mrs. L. S. Judd, Messrs. McClure, Neill, Collett and O'Neal.
Poem, "O, Sacred Dust" ..... Mrs. S. W. Austin
Chorus, "Flag of the Free" ..... Choir
Recitation, "Thirty-two Years Ago" ..... Miss L. Shirley Quartet, "When Circles Are Broken" ..... Male Quartet
Recitation, "After the Battle" ..... Mrs. J. E. Meroney
"Tenting To-night" ..... Male Quartet
"Drake's Address to the American Flag" ..... Allie Shelly Chorus, "Star Spangled Banner" Choir
"America" ..... Choir and Audience
Benediction.

A feeling of reverence and patriotism stirred the hearts of all those who had listened to the above, and its effect on the younger portion of the audience cannot be overestimated.

Baseball.

In response to an invitation from the employees of the Reward Mining Company, the Independence boys went over to Francis and played a game of baseball last Sunday. Besides the players, quite a number of the townspeople were also in evidence. By order of Superintendent Hoskins, dinner was ready for the guests upon their arrival, and the hearty cheer was washed down with copious libations of Dave Jonason's best claret. On account of the heat it was agreed to play but five innings, and what the boys lacked in skill was made up in enthusiasm. Each side was a man short and to fill in the vacancy two Pintes were pressed into service. The Lo's were all right when "on deck," but when it came to base running, cold molasses was a cyclone in comparison. This defect was remedied, however, by a coacher inserting a fishhook in the Pintes' anatomy and taking a "good lead." The score at the close of the game stood 14 to 13 in favor of the Rewards due to the frequency with which the burly first-baseman of the Rewards would "tally Laird." Mr. Hoskins is the prince of hosts, and was ably seconded by Harry Edgington and his brother Fred, the latter being captain of the Reward nine. Our boys expect to get even by giving a return game on the Fourth at Independence.

The Engine in Place.

A. A. Niel and his packing outfit got in yesterday. He succeeded in delivering Keyes' gasoline engine at the mine in good shape. The method pursued was in building a one-wheel affair on which the casting, weighing over six hundred pounds, was placed. A horse was hitched to it and the machine steadied by men walking on each side. It took nine days to perform the task, most of the time being consumed in repairing the trail.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following deeds were filed for record during the week ending June 2, 1897:

Thomas Williams and Lusilla Arcularius to J. E. Jones Jr.—Lot of land at Round Valley; consideration $25.

Charles Valencia to Inyo Exploration Co.—Mines at Jail Canyon, Panamint mining district; consideration $1.

United States to James McFinn—160 acres land at Camp Independence.

C. J. Stone to Clark Brothers—Mines at Panamint—Consideration $200.

United States to Wm. M. Breeding—160 acres land at Blackrock.

United States to Lottie M. Angel—160 acres land at Camp Independence.

United States to John G. Smith—160 acres land at Camp Independence.

United States to Maria Leonard—160 acres land at Alvord.

Sarah J. Nichols to Thomas Boland—Lucas ranch at Lone Pine; consideration $3,000.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. Va., and one of the most widely known men in the state, was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June, 1894, Evans, then salesman for the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size, and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Be sure and attend the Fourth of July meeting at the Courthouse next Tuesday evening. By all hands taking hold with a will, a good celebration can be gotten up.

Frank Whitmore met with a painful accident on his recent trip to Long Valley. In some unaccountable manner he was thrown from the wagon seat and fell upon some stones with such force as to break a rib and bruise himself severely.

Randsburg.

Although there is but little said about it, there are many small mining deals going on just now, and hardly a stage arrives that does not bring one or more would-be investors in mines. Prospectors are hustling and, by their ability to sell their prospects, are enabled to see new ground.

J. D. Brown returned from Bakersfield Thursday, where he had been summoned as a term trial juror, but was excused on account of a press of business at home.

The value of the Johannesburg Sampling Works to the camp cannot be overestimated. There are plenty of places within reach of Randsburg where the prospector can obtain a grub stake by picking up float and selling a few sacks of the rich stuff to this institution.

A discovery of the greatest importance has recently been made of an extensive coal deposit within about twelve miles of Randsburg, by Messrs. Anderson, Hoffman, Carly and Quinn. A force of men are now at work and their efforts are meeting with great success. The vein is now about four feet thick and seems to be of an anthracite character, as it can be used in the forge. It is estimated that coal can be delivered in this town for a price not to exceed $7 per ton.—Miner.

RANDSBURG, Cal., May 30.—This camp is proving itself a remarkable one, both in the richness of the ore found here and in the number of good paying mines. Without exception the mines have paid from the grass roots down and have been developed by men without means and—some of them—without experience in mining. Twenty-five or thirty claims are producing good paying rock in quantities to satisfy the most avaricious.

Heretofore the question has been, Do the veins go down to any depth or are they but pockets? The uncertainty has deterred many from delving far from the surface. The owners of the Wedge mine, feeling certain that the vein on their claim went down to a depth sufficient to make of it a mine in every sense of the word, concluded to remove all uncertainty. They have sunk to a depth of 315 feet and found the vein at that depth as good as it was at the top. They took out rock that paid over $200 to the ton. The rock at this depth was of the same character as that the Kinyons took from the 135 level of their Good Hope mine. The Wedge and the Good Hope are the best producers in the camp. So encouraged are the owners of the Wedge over their success that they will continue to sink until they reach the 500 level.

In the adjoining claim on the east—the Butte, lately purchased by Montana capitalists—a shaft is at present down 225 feet, and it will be sunk lower. The owner of the J. I. C. group, Cripple Creek mining capitalists, are sinking a double compartment shaft in the J. I. C. mine and are down to a depth of 160 feet. This is the only double compartment shaft in the camp.

Over the hill from these mines is the King Solomon group. At present they are down to a depth of 200 feet, and their owners have shipped in the necessary machinery to go down 600 feet.

The latest new find is that of the Alameda mine, in which there is rock that assays into six figures.

The Petalama mine, 5½ miles west from Randsburg, is now showing a seven-foot ledge between well-defined walls, and the ore is rich in free gold.

The Rand group has resumed operations and is shipping ore every day to the mills.

GOOD LOOKS.

There are more wrinkles in the face of a baby monkey than there are in that of an old baboon. And speaking of wrinkles, more of them can be wrought out in a fair young face by neuralgia than will be found in that of an aged person. Constant pain will shrivel, and neuralgia neglected will plow its furrows deep. It not only wrinkles, but takes the bloom away and gives the skin a dull and yellow look. St. Jacobs Oil is a prompt and sure cure for neuralgia, and it should be used, as while it soothes and cures, it smooths out the tracks of pain and leaves the skin healthy and fair again; besides it rids the sufferer of much torment and restores a happier disposition. Good looks come only with good health, and health is found in the absence of pain.

HORRID TORTURE.

This is often felt in every joint and muscle of the body by users, by people who, experiencing the earliest twinges of rheumatism, neglect to arrest the malady, as they may easily do, with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a professionally authenticated remedy for the agonizing complaint. Recollect that rheumatism unchecked often lasts a lifetime, or abruptly terminates it when the malady attacks the heart. The Bitters also remedies chills and fever, dyspepsia and liver complaint.

Enlarged Joints, From Rheumatism.

Such a Condition Indicates a Chalky Deposit and is Seldom Cured—There is Hope in Some Cases, However, From an Enriching of the Blood.

From the Record and Union, Rochester, Minn.

Mrs. Elizabeth Pratt, wife of Mr. John Pratt, one of the oldest settlers in Olmstead County, Minnesota, for many years has been painfully afflicted with rheumatism in its most aggravating and inconvenient form. Mrs. Pratt is well known in the vicinity of Viola, having during one administration held the responsible position of postmistress. She tells the tale of her affliction and subsequent restoration to health, which is printed in order that others similarly suffering may read and adopt the same remedy she did.

Viola, Olmstead Co., Minn., August 24, 1896.

"A little over ten years ago I discovered that the joints of my fingers were enlarging, and very sore. I consulted many physicians, with some slight relief at times from pain, but the joints grew larger and larger, and my neck, shoulders and limbs were so stiff that I could not move them without great pain. My toes, too, were swollen out of all shape, and my fingers were so drawn, and the muscles so contracted, that I could not use them. I had given up all hope of cure, when my attention was called about three years ago to the wonderful cures effected by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and I procured a supply.

"It was not long after I began taking them before I experienced considerable relief, and I continued using them according to directions until I have taken altogether about three dozen boxes. My fingers are now straight and flexible, and the joints reduced to their normal size, the rheumatic pains are almost gone, and now, though I always keep Pink Pills by me, I never use them unless I catch cold, or get wet through. I am willing that this testimonial shall be published, in order that the extraordinary curative powers of Dr. Williams' medicine may be known to rheumatic sufferers.

(Signed) "Mrs. E. A. Pratt."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

DOGS OF INTELLIGENCE.

A Strict Sabbatarian and a Traveler In Hansoms.

The Ladies' Kennel Journal consists of a number of dog anecdotes selected from many sources, new and old. The stories are arranged to illustrate different features of the dog's character. Here is an example of what is called a dog's "tenacity of impression," vouched for by an Edinburgh minister:

"One sacrament Sunday the minister left his house to the care of the servants, who thought it a good opportunity to give a party. During the day the dog (a Newfoundland) accompanied them through the garden, and indeed wherever they went, in the most attentive manner and seemed well pleased. In the evening, when the time arrived that the party meant to separate, they proceeded to do so, but the dog, the instant they went to the door, interposed, and, placing himself before it, would not allow one of them to touch the handle. On their persisting and attempting to use force, he became furious and in a menacing manner drove them back into the kitchen, where he kept them until the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Simpson."

From which it would appear that some dogs are Sabbatarians. At all events, he seems to have been of opinion that revelers in a manse on sacrament Sunday were out of place.

Another story, illustrating the reason of a dog, is quoted as having been told by William Robson of Penshaw, the owner of the animal. The dog was in the habit of going about in hansom cabs with his master. One day, after being lost, he went home by himself in a hansom.

"The cabman rang for his fare, and, thinking he had somehow captured the runaway, I inquired how and where he found him. 'Oh, sir,' said cabby, 'I didn't hail him at all; he hailed me. I was standing close by St. James' church looking out for a fare, when in jumps the dog. I shouts through the winder. He wouldn't stir. So I gets down and tries to pull him out and shows him my whip, but he sits still and barks as much as to say, "Go on, old man." As I seizes him by the collar I reads his name and address. My fine gentleman settles himself with his head just a-looking out, and I drives on till I stops at this gate. Then out jumps my passenger, a-clearing the doors, and walks in as though he'd been a regular fare.'"

The driving in cabs dog is by no means a rare variety. It is told of Lady Ashburnham's collie that, after jumping into a hansom, he so plainly intimates that he wants his collar read that, as one cabman said, "Blowed if he didn't ask me to."—Westminster Budget.

A Pearl Farm.

There is only one pearl farm in the world. It is in the Torres strait, at the northern extremity of Australia, and belongs to James Clark of Queensland. Mr. Clark, who is known as "the king of the pearl fishers," originally stocked it with 150,000 pearl oysters. Now 1,500 men—200 of whom are divers—and 250 vessels are employed in harvesting the crop.

"I have been 15 years engaged in pearl fishing," Mr. Clark told a correspondent of the Melbourne Age. "I began in a small way and have given the fisheries my close attention during all this time. My experience has led me to the belief that, with proper intelligence in the selection of a place, one can raise pearls and pearl shells as easily as one can raise oysters.

"I started my farm three years ago and have stocked it with shells which I obtained, in many instances, far out at sea. To grow shells successfully, however, according to my experience thus far, the water must not be too deep.

"My pearl shell farm covers 5,089 square miles. Over most of it the water is shallow. In shallow water shells attain the greatest size, and, besides, it is hard on the divers to go down deep for them.

"I ship my pearls to London in my own vessels. The catch each year runs, roughly speaking, from $200,000 worth up to almost five times that amount."

A Poet's Chivalry.

The poetry of Longfellow reveals its author's sensitive, chivalrous spirit, so that those familiar with his verses will read without surprise this story told by Mrs. Phelps-Ward in her "Chapters From a Life:"

Longfellow was reading aloud a poem one day to Mme. Modjeska, whose eyes filled with tears as the reading proceeded.

"I shall never forget," observes Mrs. Phelps-Ward, "the tone and manner with which he turned toward her. 'Oh,' he cried, 'I meant to give you happiness! And I have given you pain.'

"His accent on the word 'pain' was like the smart of a wound."

CHEAP IRRIGATION.

The Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, Cal., the largest builders of gas, gasoline and oil engines on the Coast, are making extensive preparations for the season's business.

They are filling several orders for large irrigating plants and as this line of their business increases each season, it is safe to say the farmers throughout the State are appreciating the advantages of irrigation with water pumped by this cheap power.

The Hercules Works are at present building an 80 H. P. engine for Geo. F. Packer, Colusa, which will raise 6000 gallons per minute from the river and distribute it over his land. This will be the largest gasoline pumping plant in existence.

A Queer Chicken.

Mr. More, a chicken fancier of Great Bend, Pa., has a queer chicken. It is a Plymouth Rock, two years old, that in addition to all the characteristics of a fine cock, possesses the natural instincts of a hen. He crows and fights and conducts himself as most chanticleers do; yet he has been known to adopt chickens, mother them, scratch and pick for them, raise a note of alarm when danger appeared and fold them under his wings at night. He raised two broods of chickens last year.

As soon as the chicks hatch under a hen, Mr. More removes them to a small cop, in which the cock is placed. He immediately adopts them, and is a model mother until they are ready to shift for themselves.—New York Press.

HE GOT HIS ANSWER.

But It Was Very Different From What He Had Expected.

As the train pulled out of Chicago a quiet, gentlemanly looking man entered the buffet car, and, ensconcing himself in a comfortable chair, drew out a long cigar and entered deeply into his paper. He remained so quiet and retained his seat so long that another passenger, whose bearing distinctly stamped him as a commercial traveling man, one of the kind full of chatter and curiosity, could no longer restrain himself. Addressing the quiet gentleman, he inquired, "Traveling east?"

Slowly removing his cigar, the gentleman turned and looked at his questioner with slightly elevated eyebrows, replying, "Yes."

"New York?"

"Yes."

"Pleasure?"

"Yes and no."

"Great place, New York. Ever been there before?"

"No."

"I'm going home this trip—New York, you know."

The gentleman made no reply, but resumed his paper. After a little silence the commercial man began again.

"I'm with C. & Co., on Broadway. If you drop in, I'll show you over the city."

"Thank you, it will not be necessary!"

"Excuse me, but might I ask what you're going to New York for?"

By this time most of the other passengers were interested. The gentleman, who was extremely annoyed at the drummer's curiosity, laid down his paper and exclaimed:

"I'm going to New York, first, because the train is taking me there; second, because I've got lots of money and can afford it, and, last, because if I like the place I intend to buy it."

The commercial man subsided amid a roar of laughter.—Philadelphia Times.

The Center Table.

Some one recently has spoken a word in favor of the old time center table, and it would indeed be a good thing could it be restored. The very presence of its bright lamp, its periodicals and its books suggests sociability and delightful intercourse. The very opportunity it offers for the drawing up of many chairs is a silent invitation, and it so possesses a subtle charm that is all its own. What we most need in our modern social life are informal gatherings where companionship can be enjoyed without the preparation and the fuss attendant upon a dinner or a reception. And, as the center table may properly be called a promoter of just such happy homes, it would be well were it once more given a place.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Following Precedent.

"I'm too practical to do as heroes do in books, Miss Slight, so I'll just ask you bluntly, will you be my wife?"

"No, thank you, Mr. Terse. I myself don't believe in those silly, bookish notions, and as the silly heroines always say yes, why, I'll tell you bluntly, no, sir, I won't."—Philadelphia North American.

Blood Poison.

Contagious Blood Poison has been appropriately called the curse of mankind. It is the one disease that physicians cannot cure; their mercurial and potash remedies only bottle up the poison in the system, to surely break forth in a more virulent form, resulting in a total wreck of the system.

Mr. Frank B. Martin, a prominent jeweler at 926 Pensylvania Ave., Washington, D.C., says: I was for a long time under treatment of two of the best physicians of this city, for a severe case of blood poison, but my condition grew worse all the while, notwithstanding the fact that they charged me three hundred dollars. My mouth was filled with eating sores; my tongue was almost eaten away, so that for three months I was unable to taste any solid food. My hair was coming out rapidly, and I was in a horrible fix. I had tried various treatments, and was nearly discouraged, when a friend recommended S.S.S. After I had taken four bottles, I began to get better, and when I had finished eighteen bottles, I was cured sound and well, my skin was without a blemish, and I have had no return of the disease. S.S.S. saved me from a life of misery." S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) will cure any case of blood poison. FOR EVERY BICYCLIST Champion Michael Advises Use of Paine's Celery Compound.

James Michael is the champion long distance bicyclist of the world.

He recommends all wheelmen to take Paine's celery compound.

His experience is that of thousands of others. With the opening of the bicycle season many a young person and hundreds of older people who have determined to take up bicycling as a health-giving exercise find themselves really lacking the proper "snap" or stamina to begin on. Their bodily condition prevents so spirited exercise. They would like to ride, but they are out of sorts, run down by a winter of work or indoor life. Many who are really sick, who have suffered from debility or wasting diseases for a long time until they had begun to think their troubles had become chronic, as nothing gave them relief, would turn to bicycling for relief. But this splendid exercise, like any other, requires strength to undertake. The blood is out of order, the nerves are deranged, and nature's food for both is needed.

All such persons will find to their immense joy that Paine's celery compound, taken now, will make them well.

Paine's celery compound works wonders in the spring. If you have labored under the load of repeated headaches, neuralgic pains and days of nervous debility, now is your best time to get well.

Michael is today the most phenomenal rider in professional ranks. As far back as 1894, he was undisputed champion of Great Britain, and in the following year he went to France, and scored 25 straight wins against the picked riders of Europe. He has defeated such famous men as Jacquelin, Gougoltz, Huret, Rivierre, Bonhours, Bourrillon and Barden of England, and Leyten, the Belgian champion.

He has just returned from Europe and is now ready to join the racing men on the Pacific coast, despite the large amount of work he has gone through during the past months.

Michael has made cycle racing a careful study and is in a position to give excellent advice not only to racing men but to wheelmen and athletes in general. In reference to his own methods the following letter will interest everybody:

BOSTON, MASS., Feb. 21, 1897.

After the exertion of my record rides while with the Morgan & Wright team in the south last winter, during which I lost somewhat in weight, on account of the unaccustomed climate, I was advised to use Paine's celery compound. I am pleased to say that it gave such satisfaction that I was impelled to use it again to brace up from the effects of the two unusually rough ocean trips that I have taken during the past month. I believe that wheelmen who have to undergo the hardships of "circuit chasing" will find Paine's celery compound of assistance to keeping up their physical tone. Jimmy Michael.

Every one needs to take a spring remedy to purify their blood, arouse the circulation and counteract the debilitating effect of months of confining work, worry and excitement.

The more intelligent portion of every community are the ones who best recommend Paine's celery compound. They have looked into this great remedy, followed its remarkable achievements in the case of friends, neighbors and relatives, and know just what to expect from its use as a nerve and brain strengthener and restorer and an ideal invigorator for a run-down system.

OUR SUNDAY SERMONS

A FEW SUBJECTS FOR ALL TO PONDER OVER.

Speak the Right Word at the Right Time—Keep in View the Real Principle of Life—Fruits of a Father's Prayers.

How to Succeed.

IF you speak the right word at the right time; if you are careful to leave a good impression; if you do not trespass upon the rights of others; if you always think of others as well as yourself; if you do not forget the courtesies which belong to your position, you are quite sure to accomplish much in life which others with equal abilities fail to do. This is where the race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong. It is where you make people feel that you are unselfish and honorable and truthful and sincere. This is what society is looking for in men, and it is astonishing how much men are able to win for self-respect and usefulness who possess these qualities of good breeding. It is almost the turning point of success in practical life. People will not, in the long run, have about them persons who make themselves offensive, and they yield position and influence quickly and gracefully to persons who make themselves useful in a genial way. This is the point where friends are at once most forgiving and most exacting. They will overlook great neglects if they can be assured of the loving heart behind the outward sight; but the moment you do rude things in a rude spirit and with personal coldness and selfishness the friendship is severed. This is why the best friends make the bitterest enemies. It may be set down as a rule that one can never afford not to be a gentleman. It is best to learn this rule early and practice it late. It is not well to say mean things of another, because in most cases you will have to take back all in bitterness of heart when he does you an unexpected favor. It is not wise to treat anyone brusquely, because you cannot always judge a bird by the feathers it has on. It is not well to look down on anybody, because the time may come when he may look down on you. There is a certain selfhood in everyone that should be respected. We have no right to infringe upon it. It is not morality, it is not a mere conventional rule, it is something in the nature of things, that you should always show a delicate regard for others. One who does not fail here is never known utterly to fail elsewhere.

Losing that We Might Gain.

In every department of life there is this principle at work—losing that we might gain; a present risk in order to secure, if possible, a future gain. But it often happens that the only certain thing about it is the present risk and loss; for the gain never comes. In this respect things temporal differ greatly from things spiritual; for in this spiritual world we must lose to gain—we must do to live; and if we do so there are no chances, but all prizes. "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." This is the law of the Master whom we serve, and he is able to make it good to us. You may lose your health, your strength, your liberty, your happiness, for his sake; but your promise to you is that you have only made a good investment by the loss, and the profits will come by and by, when the divine dividends are declared. "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto those who are exercised thereby." Take heart, then; for though weeping may endure for the night, yet joy cometh in the morning of resurrection and glory.

Where Father Used to Kneel.

Prayers are often answered when the lips that uttered them are sealed in death; and many a parent who has prayed and lived and died without realizing the fulfillment of his petitions, will have a glad surprise in the resurrection morning when they that sow in tears shall reap in joy.

Dr. J. B. Cranfield, in the Baptist Standard, tells this tale of a father's prayers:

"I heard a story of two young men that were very wicked, yet their father was a very earnest, consecrated Christian. He held family prayers every night, kneeling down by a little table that stood in the corner by the hearthstone; but the two young men did not care to bow with their father at that little old table. Finally the father died and left the two wicked sons. He had prayed for them many a time, and sometimes with tears in his eyes he had talked with them about their Savior, but they did not care to hear him.

"Time went on, and in after years they decided, as they had gained in property, to remove the old house and build a larger one. They were both carpenters and they undertook the job themselves. They took off the roof and then the sides of the house, and then they took up the floor, plank by plank, and finally they got near the old hearthstone, and one of them stopped and looked at his brother. He said:

"'Here's where father used to kneel and pray; there's where the little table stood, and the Bible was always on it.' The other says:

"'Yes, it seems to me I can see the print of father's knee on that old plank yet.' He continued, 'I can't take up that plank; you take it up.' The other one said:

"'No, I can't; I wish you would,' and as they looked into each other's eyes the voice of their old father spoke to them, and the Spirit of God vitalized the voice, and right there, where the old man had prayed a thousand times, the boys prayed that day and asked the old, old question, 'What shall I do to be saved?' And the Spirit of God came down and revealed Jesus to their hearts, and before that plank was ever taken up they gave their hearts to God."

Pray on, ye men of God; pray on, ye women of faith; faint not; your prayers are offered up by the Great High Priest before the throne of the majesty on high. Hold fast the promises of God, and may the Lord give you your heart's desire, and bring your households to his heavenly kingdom at last.

Straight Jabs from Moody.

A soldier cannot do much in battle if he's afraid his sword is going to break. The preacher who loses confidence in the Bible, or any part of it, is like the soldier with a weak sword.

It is easier to block the sun than to stop the fulfillment of the prophecies of the Bible.

There is no use of any law without its penalty. Men fear the penalty, not the law.

Jacob told one lie, and his ten sons lied to him the rest of his life.

Truth is truth whether the individual man believes it or not.

The church wants fighters who will strike from the shoulder; we want people all in the church or not in it at all. There is nothing so detestable in any walk of life as half-heartedness.

The merchant who tells his clerks to sell half-cotton goods for all-wool goods should not be surprised if his clerks tell him lies and steal his money.

You continue to elect saloon men to the council and you need not be surprised that each corner has a saloon.

A man gets as his reward exactly what he lives. If I sow potatoes I don't expect to reap onions.

Sin has caused more suffering in Chicago than leprosy has in all the Orient.

God will smite the American cities unless they repent; they shall become as the fulfillment of the prophecy of Babylon—the habitation of owls and the abode of wild beasts.

An Evening Prayer.

Forgive us, O Lord, if we have this day said or done anything to increase the pain and sorrow of the world. Pardon the unkind word, the impatient gesture, the hard and selfish deed, the failure to show sympathy and kindly help where we had opportunity, but missed it; and enable us so to live that we may daily do something to lessen the tide of human sorrow and add to the sum of human happiness. We have our own sorrows, O Father. We wait for footsteps that do not come; we yearn for sympathy which is not given; we knock at doors that do not open; we think of graves that hide our dearest treasures. We fear the loneliness, the changes and chances of this mortal life, and the mystery of that unknown future that stretches away in the dark like a moor beyond the light of home. But Thou art ours and we are Thine—nothing can ever separate us from thee. Do not leave us orphans, but come to us by Thy Son and by Thy Spirit. Only let us not miss the lesson of pain and sorrow and long waiting, but be made perfect through suffering like Jesus our great exemplar. We ask it in His name. Amen.

Thy Will Be Done.

"Then face to face!" Sweet words of balm
To soothe and heal some aching pain;
To help each sorrowing soul grow calm
And bid us all be brave again.

Be brave! Ah, me! They little think
Who never yet have loved and lost,
How bitter is the cup we drink,
What burning tears this parting costs.

With tear-filled eyes we kneel to pray
For strength this grief to bravely bear;
Our trembling lips try hard to say:
"Thy will be done," but falter there.

At times the longing will increase
To have our dear beloved near;
Yet God is good and sends us peace,
His tender comfort dries each tear.

Our eyes look through a darkened glass
Life has been saddened for us here;
But still we trust this soon shall pass,
And heaven's sunlight will be clear.

So patient still we try to be Content and cheerful in each place,
Till that glad day when we shall see
Our dear beloved face to face.

Ambition to Do.

It is not enough that one posseses a talent. It languishes like a morning glory at noonday unless accompanied by the characteristics which develop it. The unity of purpose, ambition, courage and industry must go with the gift. Sometimes these qualities have even been made to take the place of heaven-born talent. If we wait for the opportunity it will never come. If we work for it, it is already in sight, but everything then accomplished is in spite of. The phrase is a good one. Write it, if you will, in plain, large letters, and pin the slip of paper on your desk or some other place where it will constantly greet the eye and encourage the possibly flagging heart.

FARM AND GARDEN

Utilizing Two Old Barns.

On hundreds of farms are to be found two small barns instead of one large one. These are often detached or attached corner to corner. Space is wasted and work cannot be conveniently done in them without much loss of time. The illustrations show a plan for making the most of two such barns. They are moved to a position parallel to each other and are then connected by a shed-roofed one-storied addition, as shown in the first picture. This gives a barnyard inclosed on three sides, and so protected from wind and storm, and an interior that can be advantageously arranged. The arrangement suggested in the floor plan that is given in the second illustration is for use on a dairy farm. Where other kinds of farming are followed, a different interior arrangement can easily be decided upon. In the plan given, it is intended that a feed car be used to convey silage, grain, etc., along in front of all the cattle stalls.—American Agriculturist.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW OF BARNS.

Electric Light by Wind Power.

Electric lighting is commonly in the country regarded as exclusively a city luxury. It is likely that the expense of carrying wires from house to house in thinly settled districts would be too great to make it possible to furnish electric light on a large scale economically. But the experience of Nansen's ship, the Fram, on her northern voyage shows that electric lighting by wind power, transmitted to batteries and stored as electricity, is entirely possible. In the high Northern latitudes fuel was much too precious to be used in making electric light. So a big windmill was set up, which was run whenever the wind was favorable, and by stored electricity made a steady light all through the dark northern winter. Such windmills are often used on Norwegian vessels to work the pumps. We may yet see farm windmills providing power to run dynamos and charge storage batteries with electricity to be used for lighting farm houses, as well as to do much work that now taxes human muscles.

For Calves at Pasture.

The calves at pasture ought to have daily a little grain to keep them growing thriftily. Their increased size in the fall will more than pay for the outlay and the trouble. The sketch, from an agricultural exchange, shows a handy feed box. Put it on the inside of the pasture fence, so that the grain can be put in through the boards from the outside. Put slats on, as shown, far enough apart so that the calves can put their heads between them, but so near that the old stock, if in the pasture, cannot reach the box. The slats also support the box and hold it in place.

FEED BOX FOR CALVES.

Eggs Chilled Before Setting.

Early failure to hatch eggs very seldom come from lack of vigor in the germ; for in this the early eggs are superior. They more often come from allowing eggs to be chilled before the setting begins. Everyone knows that chilling after a few days setting soon destroys the life in the egg. It may do so where eggs that have never been set on are kept in contact with metal, which rapidly abstracts heat when the eggs are kept for greater safety near the freezing temperature. Dishes for holding eggs should be of wood, which abstracts heat slowly.

Variety of Feed for Hogs.

The hog gets at any time in his life less variety in his feed than any other kind of stock. This is especially true when he is being fattened. There are other grains that have quite as good fattening qualities as corn. A mixture of oats and barley, or of peas and barley ground together, makes a feed that will not only fatten, but will also furnish the due proportion of lean meat that is required to make healthful and easily digested pork.

Stir the Soil.

Next to mulching there is nothing like a constant stirring of the soil. I have found many workmen in gardens totally unacquainted with the principles of hoeing. The hoe is drawn over a surface already hard, cutting off weeds close to the ground. Then the weeds are raked off, leaving the ground in really worse condition than it was before, for the weeds shaded the surface if they did rob the ground. Hoeing should be fully as much to loosen the soil as to destroy weeds. Every stroke of the hoe should loosen up an inch or more of soil, and this loose soil should not be raked down too fine, or the first heavy rain will beat it down very hard. One would hardly believe what a help constant cultivation of this kind is to herbaceous and all other plants. And when rain comes the water is all taken up where it falls. Good mulching preserves the looseness of the soil in the same way. I am sure that very many more of our lovely native flowers could be successfully grown than there are if mulching or hoeing could be made a feature of cultivation.—Exchange.

Making Cider Vinegar.

First have a good, strong, iron-hooped barrel. Next have good apple cider. Cover the bunkholes with mosquito netting or other material that will keep out the flies. The bungs ought not to be put in, except temporarily, for at least a year. Keep the vinegar barrel in the garret, or other place where the air is warm and sultry. The cellar is a bad place in which to make vinegar. To hasten fermentation, occasionally turn the cider out of one barrel into another, thus exposing it more fully to the air, and, by adding a gallon of strong vinegar or a little "mother" to each barrel. There are other methods by which the process may be hastened still more, such as trickling it through beech chips or shavings; but these are hardly to be recommended, for those who are content to wait on the natural process rarely fail to find themselves amply repaid through the high value of their product.—Farm and Fireside.

Fumigate the Plants.

The lovers of flowers who try their amateur hand at raising a few flowering plants or palms at home sooner or later learn that plants require a great deal of attention in order to make them flourish properly. One of the greatest trials of the home gardener is to keep the plants free from the insects that are so apt to attack them, for which there are a number of remedies. One of the most effective and common of these is to fumigate the plant by means of tobacco smoke, and the invention here shown, the idea of a Philadelphia man, offers a remarkably convenient method of doing this. The appliance consists of a pepper box to which is attached a rubber bulb that takes the place of a bellows. The box is filled with tobacco and lighted, and by means of pressure on the bulb, that works on the principle of an atomizer, the smoke is blown wherever it is desired, so that the whole plant can be gone over in a few minutes.

FOR FUMIGATING PLANTS.

Hedge Plants.

Hedges for protection are not as common as they might be. They are not only beautiful in themselves, but, if properly managed, are cheaper than any fence—except a stone wall. There are numberless instances of well-cared-for osage orange and honey locust hedges being kept in first-rate condition for half a century, and there is no reason to believe they might not last for nearly as long again. They have to be annually trimmed, and, indeed, are the better for two trimmings a year; but one who understands this will get over the work so rapidly, that it takes little more time than it would to give the annual whitewashing to an ordinary fence. When the expression "well cared for" is used, it simply means that the cutting must always be of such a character that the bottom of the hedge is left the widest part.—Meehan's Monthly.

Poultry Pickings.

A good man is merciful to his beast also to his chickens.

Sanitary surroundings are of more consequence than medicines.

If you cannot keep your poultry in comfort, cease to keep them at all.

Light is essential to the health of the hens, therefore, have good windows.

Eggs intended for hatching should not be kept over four weeks. They must be turned every day or two.

Use Plenty of Seed.

Seed is costly, but the poorest method of economy is that of using as little seed as possible. A large number of clover crops fail because not enough seed is used, and it is better with some crops to have an extra number of plants to come up and remove those not desired than to have failure and be compelled to replant, as the time lost cannot be recovered.

The Horse's Shoes.

Some farmers make the mistake of shoeing horses when it is unnecessary, and others refuse to shoe when it should be done. Some leave the shoes on too long, just because they seem to stick well. An expanding, growing hoof will soon outgrow the shoe. The shoes should not be left on longer than five weeks.

FANCIFUL NEW GOWNS

CLOTH DRESSES ARE NO LONGER MADE PLAIN.

Pleated Skirts Are Appearing in Large Numbers—The Continued Stylishness of the Fancy Bodice Is Assured.

Late Fashion Gossip.

New York correspondence:

REAL economy and prudence haven't been apparent to a marked degree in this spring's preparations, but seem to have been left for later consideration. Something frankly fresh and bright has been generally sought after. Women have left to others the question as to whether the times are hard or good, and have taken pattern after the sunshiny bloom that has come poking up out of the soft earth.

The tailor gowns of the past winter were significant of this desire for ornamentation, and were trimmed out of almost all of their suggestions of severity, and in the spring's showing of them the entirely plain ones are scarcer than ever. Then the cloth dresses that lacked tailor finish, and yet that have been classified as "simple," are no longer free from elaboration. If they are so, they inevitably take on a workaday look, so much have the standards changed. Gowns of this kind have given way to a sort of which the first small picture here is a type. Braid trimming is one of their characteristics, and velvet garniture is another and newer one. This model included both these characteristics, and though soutache was applied to the skirt, jacket, epaulettes and sleeves, its quantity was not sufficient, by current interpretation of the term, to stand for free use. The velvet was seen in a band at the skirt hem and in the folded bodice belt, and was a shade darker than the dress goods, which was dark wine-colored cloth. Ball fringe trimmed jacket fronts and epaulettes. Velvet and velveteen are being employed in gowns that will be worn right up to summer, and the prophecy that such trimming will have summer vogue is voiced.

Another dress that stands for the shift toward elaborateness is put in the second picture. Its material was a brown and beige check suiting, and it had a vest of mauve silk. How long is it since such materials would have done the fashionable trick without other ornamentation? But it's another story in the spring of '97, and white taffeta was the vital chapter in this case. Bias folds of it trimmed skirt and jacket, the strips ending in ornaments composed of braid and the silk. Then the white silk showed in the laced slashes of the sleeves, faced revers and collar and lined the rippled basque. Without the silk trimming the gown would have been fairly described as neat, or, at the best, as jaunty; with it, it became what could be, without the least bit of gushing, characterized as stunning. This difference really sums up the results of the change in standards of taste.

Another straw that shows the direction of fashion's winds is the continued stylishness of the fancy bodice. In midwinter we were assured that the fancy bodice was hopelessly out, and the attire of some of the most careful dressers confirmed this decree of the ever-restless designers. But the well-laid plan was swamped, and there's no end of fancy bodices just now. As everyone knows, there is very little to add to their novelties—almost everything has already been done—but we are doing it over again with charming grace, and adding a little touch now and then. The cross-over, double-breasted effect, fastening at one side, and the running of little rows of tucks in unexpected cross-slanting lines are new notions. All this tends to emphasize the bust, and that is the effort this season. To this end bows of ribbon, of tucks or of velvet are placed from under the arm near the belt, on a slant across the figure to the fastening of the bodice. The same idea is carried out startlingly in evening bodices. One example was so arranged that the drapery of the bodice appeared to begin under the left arm, being drawn up from there over the right arm. Swathing the torso in folds has been gaining popularity and artistic significance for several seasons, and is now made much use of, all the folds being pushed above the waist line, for not the least addition to waist size is allowed.

A SIMPLE FORM OF PLEATED SKIRT.

With some of the newest fancy waists it is attempted to have them match the skirt, and yet be suitable to wear with other skirts. The next picture illustrates this economical trick, which is one that demands good judgment on the part of the planner. The blouse waist was pale blue and brown plaid cloth, and the belt was black velvet. The skirt was beige cloth, and the item that mated skirt and bodice was the bolero, which was from the skirt stuff. It was in one piece in back, but each front was composed of three overlapping parts, each part and the back being edged with bias folds of white cloth. Both the plain and plaided cloth were put into the collar. While this bodice will appear to have been especially planned for this skirt, the matching is not so close but that it serves nicely with other plain skirts.

As fancy bodices have long been in fashion, their continuing elaborate does not strongly mark the growing favor for highly wrought effects, and it is left, after all, for skirts to show the change most plainly. Sun-burst pleated skirts are appearing in large numbers, and often, as in the fourth sketch, they are accompanied by pleated bodices.

PLEATING THAT ELABORATES.

This pictured dress was pale blue barege, its skirt trimmed at the hips with two bands of cream insertion. A band of lace gave yoke effect to the pleated bodice, and the dainty fichu was pale blue crepe de chine bordered with a ruffle. Blue gros grain ribbon gave belt and collar loops, and the sleeves were wrinkled from wrist to shoulder.

Accordion pleated silk skirts rush in to fill the need for dressy skirts, now that the black satin skirt is overworked for dress wear. These silken skirts are more becoming. They come in all colors, and are suitable for wear with the most elaborate bodices. Mouse gray taffeta thus pleated, for instance, is finished with a deep band at the knees of a glittering openwork embroidery, through which the gray of the silk shows. The embroidery is pleated in with the skirt, though how it was done without crushing the jewels is a question. So beautifully does the embroidery combine colors that almost any color scheme is possible for the bodice.

The model of pleated skirt shown is simplicity itself when compared with some of the models in rich fabrics. One of these comes in the concluding picture, and was found in black satin, decorated at the sides with three accordion pleated black chiffon ruffles, leaving back and front in panel form. The waist was white satin covered with rich white lace and trimmed in front with narrow black velvet ribbon. Collar and belt were cerise velvet, and the fitted sleeves were covered with wrinkled chiffon and were capped with lace epaulettes bordered with black chiffon ruchings.

NEW MINING LAWS.

The text of the new mining law as passed by the last Legislature is here given. The amended measure went to the Governor just before the Legislature adjourned and received his signature in March. It became a law on May 6th:

Sec. 1. The location of mining claims on the public domain of the United States shall be made and perfected as provided in this act.

Sec. 2. The discoverer of any vein or lode shall immediately, upon making a discovery, erect at the point of discovery a substantial monument or mound of rocks and post thereon a preliminary notice which shall contain:

First—The name of the lode or claim.

Second—The name of the locator or locators.

Third—The date of discovery.

Fourth—The number of linear feet claimed in length along the course of the vein each way from the point of discovery.

Fifth—The width claimed on each side of the center of the vein.

Sixth—The general course of the vein or load, as near as may be.

Seventh—That such notice is a first or preliminary notice. Such notice shall be recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county in which the same is posted within twenty days after the posting thereof. Upon the erection of said monument and posting such notice, the discoverer shall be allowed the period of time specified in section 3 of this act to enable him to perfect his location as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 3. Within sixty days from the date of the discovery of a vein or lode, the discoverer must perform $50 worth of labor in developing his discovery, and mark his location on the ground so that its boundaries can be readily traced, and must file in the office of the county recorder of the county in which the claim is situated, a certificate of location, which said certificate shall state:

1. The name of the lode or claim.

2. The name of the locator or locators.

3. The date of discovery and posting of notice, provided for in section 2 of this act, which shall be considered as the date of the location.

4. A description of the claim, defining the exterior boundaries as they are marked upon the ground, and such additional description by references to some natural objects or permanent monument as will identify the claim.

5. A statement that such certificate is final or completed notice of location, and that he has performed the aforesaid $50 worth of labor in development work thereon within the aforesaid sixty-day period, stating generally the nature thereof. Said certificate shall be dated and signed by or on behalf of the locator or locators, and verified by them or by some one in their behalf, and when filed for record shall be deemed and considered as prima facie evidence of the facts therein recited. A copy of such certificate of location, certified by the county recorder, shall be admitted in evidence in all actions or proceedings with the same effects of the original. The performance of such labor shall be deemed a necessary act in completing such location, and a part thereof, and no part thereof shall inure to the benefit of any subsequent location.

Sec. 4. The discoverer of placers or other forms of deposit, subject to location and appropriation, under mining laws applicable to placers, shall locate his claim in the following manner:

First—He must immediately post in a conspicuous place at the point of discovery thereon a notice or certificate of location thereof containing:

(a) The name of claim.

(b) The name of the locator or locators.

(c) The date of the discovery and posting the notice, hereinbefore provided for, which shall be considered as the date of the location.

(d) A description of the claim by reference to legal subdivisions of sections, if the location is made in conformity with the public surveys; otherwise a description with reference to some natural object or permanent monument as will identify the claim, and where such claim is located by legal subdivisions of the public surveys, such location shall, notwithstanding that fact, be marked by the locator upon the ground, the same as other locations.

Second—Within thirty days from the date of such discovery, he must record such notice or certificate of location in the office of the county recorder of the county in which such discovery is made, and so distinctly mark his location on the ground that its boundaries can be readily traced.

Third—Within sixty days from the date of the discovery the discoverer shall perform labor upon such location or claim in developing the same to an amount which shall be equivalent in the aggregate to at least $10 worth of labor for each twenty acres, or fractional part thereof, contained in such location or claim.

A failure to perform such labor within said time shall cause all rights under such location to be forfeited and the land discovered thereby shall at once be open so location by qualified locators other than the preceding locators, but shall not in any event be open to location by such preceding locators, and any labor performed by them thereon shall not inure to the benefit of any subsequent locator thereof.

Fifth—Such locator shall, upon the performance of such labor, file with the recorder of the county an affidavit showing such performance, and generally the nature and kind of work so done.

Sec. 5. The affidavit provided for in the last section and the aforesaid placer notice or certification when filed for record shall be deemed and considered as prima facie evidence of the facts therein recited. A copy of such certificate, notice or affidavit, certified by the county recorder, shall be admitted in evidence in all actions and proceedings with the same effect as the original.

Sec. 6. All locations of quartz or placer formations or deposits, hereafter made, which do not conform to the requirements of this act, in so far as the same are respectively applicable thereto, shall be void.

Sec. 7. No record of a mining claim or mill site made after the passage of this act, in the records of any mining district, shall be valid. All notices of locations of mining claims, mill sites and other notices, heretofore recorded in such district records, if such notices conform to the local rules and regulations in force in such district, are hereby declared valid. Within thirty days after the passage of this act the district recorder or custodian of the records of the several mining districts in this State, shall transmit to the county recorders of the respective counties wherein the respective districts are situated, all the records of said respective districts, and thenceforward such county recorder shall be deemed and considered the legal custodian of such records. Thereafter copies of such records, certified by the county recorder, may be received in evidence with the same effect as the originals.

Sec. 8. This act shall take effect and be in force sixty days after the passage.

Durrant and Worden Respited Until October

The execution of Worden and Durrant has been postponed by the U. S. Circuit Court until the questions involved in the appeals shall be decided by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Attorney-General Fitzgerald wired Warden Aull not to execute Worden until the Appellate Federal Court passed on the case. He also wrote an elaborate opinion.

An appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court was also allowed by Circuit Judge Gilbert in the case of Durrant. As the merits of the judgments of State courts do not arise in an appeal from a refusal to award a writ of habeas corpus, the Worden and Durrant cases now stand on the same ground. Neither one will be executed until the Federal appeal shall be decided by the Supreme Court.

There can be no further legal proceedings until the Supreme Court meets in October.

Under the Federal statutes and decisions no other course was open, as every person on American soil who alleges that he is detained in violation of the constitution of the United States may seek the ancient writ of habeas corpus in the Federal trial courts. In the event that these courts fail to award the writ, the law provides an appeal to the Supreme Court, and the Federal Judge who refused to award the writ in the first instance has no choice in the matter of granting the appeal. The right of the citizen to go to the higher court is held to be absolute and unquestioned.

The point last stated was decided with emphasis by Judge Sawyer in a well-known California case.

He held, in the case of San Hung, August 24, 1885, reported in the Federal Reporter, "that the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in habeas corpus cases is absolute and in no manner dependent upon the discretion of the Judge to allow or deny."

Durrant and Worden cannot lawfully be executed until the Supreme Court passes on their appeals, because it would be folly to grant a citizen a right and then allow him to be deprived of his life pending the final adjudication.

There was no hesitation by Judge Gilbert because he well knew he had no discretion. The law commands him to allow the appeal. Attorney General Fitzgerald advised the Warden not to hang the murderers pending the appeal because section 753 of the U. S. Revised Statutes declares all State interference pending the final decision null and void.

The rulings are not at all new to lawyers familiar with Federal practice, for they well know that the Ingersoll other New York electrocution cases were held in the air for years by the Federal law of habeas corpus, familiarly known as "every man's hoodoo."

A more startling possibility that lurks in the loosely drawn Federal law is the prospect of a multiplicity of writs in any given case. The Ingersoll case holds that the petitioner may apply again and again on the same grounds, the limit of applications and appeals being set by his own desires only. In this remarkable case Judge Lacombe says:

"This is the second application to this court for a writ of habeas corpus by this petitioner under the same conviction, and two of the grounds upon which he bases his present application existed when he made his former application. Whether this is the second or the twenty-second application, however, is immaterial. Under the statutes as they stand it seems to be left to the petitioner alone to determine not only how many times he will apply for the writ, and whether he will appeal from its denial, but also how often he will, by such appeal, invoke the operation of section 766 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provides that, until final judgment thereon, any proceedings against his person under State authority shall be null and void."

The decisions in the Worden and Durrant cases bring the defects of the Federal law under the catholic ray and there is no doubt that the United States courts will from this time on be crowded with applications for a lease of life in the case of men under the death sentence.

Our Attorney-General said recently: "I had intended to call the attention of Senators White and Perkins to the defects in the law long ago, but I thought I might be accused of taking too much interest in the cases, so I dropped the matter entirely."

On Sunday, June 13, religious services will be held as follows:

Aberdeen, at 11 a. m.

Liberty at 3 p. m.

Independence, at 7:30 p. m.

Subject, "What Christianity Has Done for Woman."

In treating this subject we purpose to show what was the condition of woman under Roman law, under early Teutonic sway, and under the oldest and best religions of the East, and then show how her condition has been improved by the uplifting power of Christianity.

All are cordially invited. A collection taken at the close for missions.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

J. C. Miller was down from Big Pine last Saturday.

Quite a thunder shower in the mountains yesterday.

J. H. Bulpitt of Bishop was a visitor in town last Saturday.

Sheriff Given got back from a second trip to Ballarat last Monday.

Pastor Nicholas was unable to preach last Sunday on account of illness.

School Superintendent Austin left Independence this morning for Bishop.

Charley Collins expects to start for Los Angeles in a few days with a band of horses.

Rudolph Shober passed through town yesterday with his big train en route for Mojave.

Norm. Mairs got back from Long Valley yesterday. Fred Edgington returned with him.

Mrs. A. Stewart came up from Lone Pine on Wednesday, and is visiting with Mrs. J. R. Moffitt.

George W. Huckaby made final proof on his timber-culture claim near Bishop at the U. S. Land Office last Saturday.

Charley Robinson says the lakes above Onion Valley are free from ice, but that it is very cold up there and poor fishing.

Pete McGann has gone to Modesto with a band of mules. He had an order for all he owned that were old enough to work.

About half a mile of the depot road is badly washed out. A large stream of waste water has been running down it for about a week.

Charley Robinson brought down the first load of snow for the season last Tuesday. Charley's ice-house is well stocked this season.

L. V. Olcese left Bishop for San Francisco yesterday morning. While at Bishop he delivered about 20,000 head of sheep to Nevada parties.

Sam Spratt was down from Big Pine last Saturday. He says the Big Pine sawmill is running on full time, and is turning out a good grade of lumber.

Percy W. Palmer arrived at Bishop last Monday from Chicago. Mr. Palmer is one the owners of the Mammoth mines and is here looking after his interests.

Mrs. D. J. Hession started for San Francisco last Saturday in company with R. Hession, who is in poor health and has gone to the city for medical treatment.

Quite a number of the men at the Reward are on the sick list, and in consequence the supply of ore at the mill is getting limited. The main trouble seems to be a form of dysentery.

The Senate has confirmed the nominations of Miguel A. Otero as Governor of New Mexico; George H. Wallace, Secretary of New Mexico: Charles H. Akers, Secretary of Arizona.

The regular annual custom of making irrigating ditches out of the public roads has set in. All along the line from Bishop to Independence the roads are filled with running streams and lakes of water.

Mr Partridge, while painting for Billy Matlack, fell from a scaffolding and sprained his ankle badly. Dr. Woodin is bringing him round, and expects to see him in the merry dance on the Fourth of July.

An accident occurred to Supt. Hoskins last Monday at the Reward mill. He was fixing a belt on the tramway when his finger was caught and badly bruised. He came to town and was treated by Dr. Woodin.

An agent for Wells, Fargo & Co. was looking at horses in the valley this week with a view to purchase for express purposes. He stated that his company would ship the animals to Eastern points.

The factory of the Standard Biscuit Co., on Folsom street between Fourth and Fifth streets, San Francisco, was destroyed by fire last Monday, and three firemen were killed by a falling wall. Two of them, F. Keller and T. Hallinan, met death while bravely trying to rescue a comrade. Value of the premises, $[illegible]000; insurance only $50,000.

Horses and Mules.

There is a demand, not perceptibly diminished, for well built, well colored and well trained reliable family horses, says a St. Louis writer. A man with something of the tact and temper of a Rarey, it seems to me, could make, if not a large fortune, a very substantial living by buying up young horses, matching them and gentling them for family use, to go either single or double. They must be made familiar with the noises of a bustling city, obedient and reliable under all normal circumstances. Horses are often seen hitched up to drays or freight wagons standing or moving so close to a locomotive or a train of cars that they must needs turn their heads to have them pass, and yet they are not frightened. They get their assurance of not being hurt from their owner and their driver. The man and the animal trust each other. Still other uses might be named for which no machine will answer as well as the horse; hence we reason that there is a ready sale for an all-around good horse. Who among the patriarchs invented the mule we are not told. The prophets were satisfied with the ass. However, David at the inauguration of his son Solomon gave special direction that he (his son), as a distinguished honor, should ride his own mule. Of the genus equinus there is no surer footed animal than the donkey. In going over hill and mountain, over rocks and stones, the donkey keeps his footing. He does not receive credit for his thoughtfulness, but is charged with being lazy. That he transmits to his progeny, even when mated with the true female equine, this peculiar trait of surefootedness is well known. A woman principal of one of our public schools in St. Louis travelled on muleback through the canyons of the Yosemite on a trail so narrow that the skirt of her riding habit hung over the side of the precipice, 100 feet or more above the abyss. Another lady, a physician, crossed the Himalaya mountains, trying to enter Thibet, on a trail so narrow that she had to walk and take hold of the donkey's tail. Our finest jacks, even from the time of Washington, are brought from Spain. Whether this particular instinct, faculty or trait, whatever you please, was the reason for the Spaniards purchasing mules for their cavalry in Cuba, we cannot determine for the want of reliable testimony. They did, however, buy hundreds, if not thousands, of them and had them shipped to Cuba. The mule, like his paternal ancestor, is satisfied with thistles, sage brush or browse generally, but he does not despise and neglect corn and hay when put within his reach. He is very strong and is not judged valuable for his beauty, but for the strength and size of his legs A well trained mule can pull heavier loads than a horse of the same weight. He can also endure more hardships than a horse in the way of abstinence from food and drink, and it is currently believed that he will not founder by drinking when hot. Taking all these good points into consideration, it is no wonder that high-bred jacks are held at high prices and that "the passing of the horse" has not materially affected the market or the price of standard quality mules. It takes large, roomy mares for mule breeding.

Mail Route to Ballarat.

A petition was circulated about town this week, asking for the re-establishment of the old mail route from Darwin to Panamint, via Ballarat. The petition bore a large number of signatures from Southern Inyo and was signed by all the business men here. The town of Ballarat and its immediate surroundings has a population of over three hundred people, and is steadily growing. The nearest postoffice is at Darwin, about forty miles away, and in consequence it is a very uncertain matter of receiving mail. By the establishment of the route asked for, the people of that district would be brought into direct communication with the outside world. Ballarat is sixty-four miles from Keeler, the terminus of the Carson & Colorado railroad, and the mail could easily be carried through in a day, and by putting on a close connection, mail could be received at Ballarat from San Francisco only twelve hours later than Independence. It will be a great convenience to a large number of people, and Congressman De Vries will no doubt interest himself in the matter and see to it that it is carried out.

Real Estate Transfers

The following deed was filed for record during the week ending June 9, 1897:

M. Watterson to Charles Seigler—160 acres land near Big Pine; consideration $2400.

A fishing party consisting of Sheriff Given, Ben Yandell Esq. and "Dad" Showalter started for Cottonwood Creek yesterday morning. They stayed up all night so as to be up early in the morning and then forgot that they had any further use for their beds and went off without them.

Hundreds of thousands have been induced to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy by reading what it has done for others, and having tested its merits for themselves are to-day its warmest friends. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Clifford Baxter and Charles Gringby left Berkeley last Thursday, taking train to Sanger and stage to Sequoia Mills, then walked to Onion Valley, where they were met by Harry Bert. The trio then rode in the saddle here. They had a rough trip, having to jump from rock to rock in crossing the snow, which in some places was hundreds of feet deep.

A Fourth of July meeting was held at the Courthouse on Tuesday evening, and a committee of four appointed to solicit subscriptions and report upon a programme at a meeting to be held next Tuesday evening. It was decided unanimously to celebrate the day, and all, especially the children, will have a thoroughly good time.

Ballarat Briefs.

Sheriff Given visited the camp this week.

Jack Gunn of Independence came to town on the 3rd.

Court was in session several days this week.

There is considerable excitement in camp over the mines. New ledges are constantly being discovered and old mines changing hands.

Thomas B. Pheby of San Francisco has just purchased the mine known as the Williams mine, owned by Robert Montgomery and others. He will set about developing the mine and, if the result justifies the outlay, will put up a mill.

If you you are coming to Ballarat, leave your blankets and bring your fans. The temperature is pretty high. Within the last week it reached 113 deg.

Edwards vs. Adams—Filed complaint; issued summons.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. Va., and one of the most widely known men in the State, was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June, 1894, Evans, then salesman for the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size, and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured. In the Name of the Law

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

[Copyright, 1895, by the Author.]

On the moorland above the old gray village of Carbaix, in Finistere—Finistere, the most westerly province of Brittany—stands a cottage, built, as all the cottages in that country are, of rough hewn stones. It is a poor, rude place today, but it wore an aspect far more rude and primitive 100 years ago—say on an August day in the year 1793, when a man issued from the doorway, and, shading his eyes from the noonday sun, gazed long and fixedly in the direction of a narrow rift which a few score paces away breaks the monotony of the upland level. This man was tall and thin and unkempt, his features expressing a mixture of cunning and simplicity. He gazed awhile in silence, but at length uttered a grunt of satisfaction as the figure of a woman rose gradually into sight. She came on slowly, in a stooping posture, dragging behind her a great load of straw, which completely hid the little sledge on which it rested, and which was attached to her waist by a rope of twisted hay.

The figure of a woman—rather of a girl. As she drew nearer it could be seen that her cheeks, though brown and sunburned, were as smooth as a child's. She looked scarcely 18. Her head was bare, and her short petticoats, of some coarse stuff, left visible bare feet thrust into wooden shoes. She advanced with her head bent and her shoulders strained forward, her face dull and patient. Once, and once only, when the man's eyes left her for a moment, she shot at him a look of scared apprehension, and later, when she came abreast of him, her breath coming and going with her exertions, he might have seen, had he looked closely, that her strong brown limbs were trembling under her.

But the man noticed nothing in his impatience and only chid her for her slowness. "Where have you been dawdling, lazy bones?" he cried.

She murmured, without halting, that the sun was hot.

"Sun hot!" he retorted. "Jeanne is lazy, I think! Mon Dieu, that I should have married a wife who is tired by noon! I had better have left you to that never do well, Pierre Bounat. But I have news for you, my girl."

He lounged after her as he spoke, his low, cunning face—the face of the worst kind of French peasant—flickering with cruel pleasure as he saw how she started at his words. She made no answer, however. Instead she drew her load with increased vehemence toward one of the two doors which led into the building. "Well, well, I will tell you presently," he called after her. "Be quick and come to dinner."

He entered himself by the other door. The house was divided into two chambers by a breast high partition of wood. The one room served for kitchen. The other, now half full of straw, was barn and granary, fowlhouse and dovecot, in one. "Be quick!" he called to her. Standing in the houseroom he could see her head as she stopped to unload the straw.

In a moment she came in, her shoes clattering on the floor. The perspiration stood in great beads on her forehead and showed how little she had deserved his reproach. She sat down silently, avoiding his eyes, but he thought nothing of this. It was no now thing. It pleased him, if anything.

"Well, my Jeanne," he said in his gibing tone, "are you longing for my news?"

The hand she stretched out toward the pitcher of cider, which, with black bread and onions, formed their meal, shook, but she answered simply, "If you please, Michel."

"Well, the Girondins have been beaten, my girl, and are flying all over the country. That is the news. Master Pierre is among them, I do not doubt, if he has not been killed already. I wish he would come this way."

"Why?" she asked suddenly, looking up at last, a flash of light in her gray eyes.

"Why?" he repeated, grinning across the table at her. "Because he would be worth 5 crowns to me. There is 5 crowns, I am told, on the head of every Girondin who has been in arms, my girl."

The French revolution, it will be understood, was at its height. The more moderate and constitutional Republicans—the Girondins, as they were called—worsted in Paris by the Jacobins and the mob, had lately tried to raise the provinces against the capital, and to this end had drawn together at Caen, near the border of Brittany. They had been defeated, however, and the Jacobins, in this month of August, were preparing to take a fearful vengeance at once on them and the Royalists. The reign of terror had begun. Even to such a boor as this, sitting over his black bread, the revolution had come home, and in common with many a thousand others he wondered what he could make of it.

Tellier bent over him.

The girl did not answer, even by the look of contempt to which he had become accustomed and for which he hated her, and he repeated: "Five crowns! Ah, it is money, that is! Mon Dieu!" Then, with a sudden exclamation, he sprang up. "What is that?" he cried.

He had been sitting with his back to the barn, but he turned now so as to face it. Something had startled him—a rustling in the straw behind him. "What is that?" he said, his hand on the table, his face lowering and watchful.

The girl had risen also, and as the last word passed his lips sprang by him, with a low cry, and aimed a frantic blow with her stool at something he could not see.

"What is it?" he asked, recoiling.

"A rat!" she answered, breathless. And she aimed another blow at it.

"Where?" he asked fretfully. "Where is it?" He snatched his stool, too, and at that moment a rat darted out of the straw, ran nimbly between his legs and plunged into a hole by the door. He flung the wooden stool after it, but, of course, in vain. "It was a rat!" he said as if before he had doubted it.

"Thank God!" she muttered. She was shaking all over.

He stared at her in stupid wonder. What did she mean? What had come to her? "Have you had a sunstroke, my girl?" he said suspiciously.

Her nut brown face was a shade less brown than usual, but she met his eyes boldly and said, "No," adding an explanation which for the moment satisfied him. But he did not sit down again. When she went out, he went also. And though, as she retired slowly to the rye-fields and work, she repeatedly looked back at him, it was always to find his eyes upon her. When this had happened half a dozen times, a thought struck him. "How now?" he muttered. "The rat ran out of the straw!"

Nevertheless he still stood gazing after her, with a cunning look upon his features, until she disappeared over the edge of the rift, and then he crept back to the door of the barn and stole in out of the sunlight into the cool darkness of the raftered building, across which a dozen rays of light were shooting, laden with dancing motes. Inside he stood stock still until he had regained the use of his eyes, and then he began to peer round him. In a moment he found what he sought. Half upon and half hidden by the straw lay a young man in the deep sleep of utter exhaustion. His face, which bore traces of more than common beauty, was now white and pinched. His hair hung dank about his forehead. His clothes were in rags, and his feet, bound up in pieces torn at random from his blouse, were raw and bleeding. For a short while Michel Tellier bent over him, remarking these things with glistening eyes. Then the peasant stole out again. "It is 5 crowns!" he muttered, blinking in the sunlight. "Ha, ha! Five crowns!"

He looked round cautiously, but could see no sign of his wife, and after hesitating and pondering a minute or two he took the path for Carbaix, his native astuteness leading him to saunter slowly along in his ordinary fashion. After that the moorland about the cottage lay seemingly deserted. Thrice, at intervals, the girl dragged home her load of straw, but each time she seemed to linger in the barn no longer than was necessary. Michel's absence, though it was unlooked for, raised no suspicion in her breast, for he would frequently go down to the village to spend the afternoon. The sun sank lower, and the shadow of the great monolith, which, standing on the highest point of the moor, about a mile away, rose gaunt and black against a roseate sky, grew longer and longer, and then, as twilight fell, the two coming home met a few paces from the cottage. He asked some questions about the work she had been doing, and she answered briefly. Then, silent and uncommunicative, they went in together. The girl set the bread and cider on the table, and, going to the great black pot which had been simmering all day upon the fire, poured some broth into two pitchers. It did not escape Michel's frugal eye that there was still a little broth left in the bottom of the pot, and this induced a new feeling in him—anger. When his wife hailed him by a sign to the meal, he went instead to the door and fastened it. Thence he went to the corner and picked up the wood chopper, and, armed with this, came back to his seat.

The girl watched his movements, first with surprise and then with secret terror. The twilight was come, and the cottage was almost dark, and she was alone with him, or, if not alone, yet with no one near who could help her. Yet she met his grin of triumph bravely. "What is this?" she said. "Why do you want that?"

"For the rat," he answered grimly, his eyes on hers.

"Why not use your stool?" she strove to murmur, her heart sinking.

"Not for this rat," he answered. "It might not do, my girl. Oh, I know all about it," he continued. "I have been down to the village and seen the mayor, and he is coming up to fetch him." He nodded toward the partition, and she knew that her secret was known.

"It is Pierre," she said, trembling violently and turning first crimson and then white.

"I know it, Jeanne. It was excellent of you! Excellent! It is long since you have done such a day's work."

"You will not give him up?"

"My faith, I shall!" he answered, affecting and perhaps really feeling wonder at her simplicity. "He is 5 crowns, girl! You do not understand. He is worth 5 crowns and the risk nothing at all."

If he had been angry or shown anything of the fury of the suspicious husband, if he had been about to do this out of jealousy or revenge, she would have quailed before him, though she had done him no wrong save the wrong of mercy and pity. But his spirit was too mean for the great passions. He felt only the sordid ones, which to a woman are the most hateful. And instead of quailing she looked at him with flashing eyes. "I shall warn him," she said.

"It will not help him," he answered, sitting still and feeling the edge of the hatchet with his fingers.

"It will help him," she retorted. "He shall go. He shall escape before they come."

"I have locked the doors!"

"Give me the key!" she panted. "Give me the key, I say!" She had risen and was standing before him, her figure drawn to its full height. He rose hastily and retreated behind the table, still retaining the hatchet in his grasp.

(To Be Continued.)

Wolseley's Close Call.

On one occasion Lord Wolseley's life was saved by Prince Victor of Hohenlohe, known as Count Gleichen. It was in the Crimea, when young Wolseley, badly wounded, was passed by the surgeon as dead. Undisturbed by the surgeon's remarks, Prince Victor tried to extract a jagged piece of stone which was sticking in the wound, and the prince succeeded in restoring Wolseley, for, after a little brandy had been poured down his throat and more asseverations from the surgeon that he was dead, he sat up and exclaimed, "No more dead than you are, you fool!"—Liverpool Mercury.

BITS FOR BOOKWORMS

E. L. Godkin, editor of the Nation, contributes to the Atlantic an article on "Our Nominating System," in which he shows that the weakest place in our whole political machinery is the way in which nominations are made. Mr. Godkin suggests certain remedies for the irresponsible methods which now so often deprive party nominations of all representative value.

The rising of the Greeks against the Turks in Crete gives special timeliness to the reminiscences of the Greek revolution in 1821, which F. B. Sanborn has prepared for the Scribner's, under the title "Odysseus and Trelawny—A Sequel to Byron's Grecian Career." Odysseus was one of the most picturesque heroes of that romantic age, and during part of the revolution Trelawny and he lived in a cave on Mount Parnassus.

It is said that if Du Maurier had not used the title "The Martians," that would have been the name of H. G. Wells' new story. "The War of the Worlds" is the title Mr. Wells has chosen for his daring piece of imaginative writing. The plot is founded on the idea that Mars, growing cold through the ages, has developed the faculties of its inhabitants far in advance of ours. So, when they migrate to the earth and arrive in England, there are some interesting developments.

Frank Podmore, who is well known among students of spirit-lore by his "Phantasms of the Living," has just concluded the writing of a work which is likely to cause some stir in the dovecotes of spiritualism. This book is entitled "Studies in Psychical Research," and is, in effect, a rather surprising exposure of many of the best-reputed mediums, together with a careful examination of some of the ghost stories which have hitherto been accepted by the followers of psychical research as incontrovertible.

It may be noted, in connection with the new edition of Charles Lever's works, that "The Confessions of Harry Lorrequer," the initial volume, has two endings. For one of them was lost in the post, and before it was recovered Lever had written another for the despairing publishers, who, exactly sixty years ago, were issuing it in the Dublin University Magazine. Both endings are printed in the new volume. It may be remarked that the last complete set of original issues of Lever's novels was sold in London a few years back for £160; but more than double this price has been obtained in America.

Transferring Pictures.

Prints or lithographs may be transferred to glass by a very simple process. The glass is cleaned with alcohol and a polisher, then coated with fine dammar varnish, laid on very evenly. It is then put away in a place where there is no dust, where it is to remain until it is so sticky that when touched with the finger, the glass, if a small plate, may be lifted by the adhesion. The picture to be transferred must be soaked in rainwater until it is completely saturated, then placed between sheets of blotting-paper, and gently pressed. This removes all superfluous water. Now put the pictures face down, upon the sticky side of the glass. The utmost care is necessary in placing it, as once it touches it cannot be moved without danger of tearing out pieces of the print. When it is adjusted, begin at one corner and press the picture closely upon the adhesive surface, watching it continually to see that no air-bubbles appear between the picture and the varnished surface. When this is finished, put the picture away again, let it remain until quite dry, then lay a wet towel over the back of the picture until the paper is thoroughly soaked. Now begin at one corner, and with the fingers, frequently dipped in water so that they will remain wet, rub off the white paper. Continue this until all the white portion is removed. This will leave only the color of the picture upon the glass. At the finish give the back a rather heavy coat of transparent varnish. Let it dry thoroughly, and add a very thin second coat. When this is perfectly dry, frame the picture with a very thin glass over the varnished side. Hang in the window as a transparency. A few attempts may be necessary before expert handling is acquired, but perseverance will bring success, and with care and a little ingenuity very many beautiful pictures may be prepared at the most trifling expense.

A Botanical Freak.

One of the curiosities of nature is known as a plant atol. There are but two or three of these known to scientists. This atol is made up of a circle of growing plants. They are found floating on the top of ponds or lakes. They form a hoop-shaped figure and are closely matted together at the roots, which make a sort of cup or basin, to which more or less vegetable matter falls or floats. There is a sufficient amount of nutriment in this to keep the plant growing. As it increases, the roots become longer and larger, and in time the plant may anchor itself in the soil at the bottom of the pond. These rings, after many years of accumulation and growth, make what appear to be small islands. It is the opinion of certain scientists that islands may have been formed in this manner. The roots catch all floating vegetable or animal matter. Leaves collect and form mold, and after a while birds may drop plant or tree seeds on the little pod that floats on the top of the water. These take root and further assist in the growth of the little island. It may take centuries for the plant to come to any size, but with nature a thousand years are but as yesterday.

TENNESSEE HORSE TRADERS.

Their Devious Ways of Making Poor Horses Sell Well.

The first Monday of every month is horse-swapping day in Tennessee. There are thousands of men who gain their livelihood by their wits in this business. The tricks of the Tennessee horse traders are legion, and unless a man is accustomed to horses it is folly for him to depend upon his own knowledge in dealing with the tricksters in the horse markets of the State.

When a Tennessee horse trader wants to make a true-pulling horse balk, so he can purchase him at a low price, he mixes cantharides and corrosive sublimate, and bribes the stable boy to bathe the horse's shoulder with the mixture. One of the greatest frauds is to make a good horse appear lame. The professional trader takes a single hair from the tail, puts it through the eye of a needle, lifts the front leg, and presses the skin betwen the outer and middle tendons. Then he shoves the needle through, cuts off the hair at each end and lets the foot down. The horse goes lame within twenty minutes. When he desires to make a horse stand by his food and not eat it, he greases the front teeth and the roof of the mouth with beef tallow, and the horse will not eat until its mouth is washed out.

A horse is made to appear badly foundered by the fastening of a fine wire tightly around its fetlock, between the foot and heel. The wire is never left on over nine hours, or the horse would become permanently lame. Many men buy nice-looking animals, but by the time they get the horses home find these to be badly afflicted with the heaves. The trader has simply to force half a pound of small shot into a horse's stomach to disguise the heaves. A small quantity of melted butter poured into the ear of a horse will make the owner think the horse has the glanders.

When a horse goes dead lame in one shoulder the defect is always disguised by a similar lameness in the other shoulder. This is done by taking off the shoe and inserting a bean between it and the foot.

A lame horse is nerved to appear at its best by a small incision about half way from the knee to the joint on the outside of the leg. At the back part of the shinbone is a small white tendon which is cut off and the external wound is closed with a stitch. The horse will then walk on the hardest pavement and not limp. White horses are beautified with black spots often by the application of powdered lime and litharge boiled together. When a professional trainer finds a man who wants a handsome horse he often produces a star in its forehead by spreading warm pitch on a piece of coarse towel of just the size of the star and applying it to the part shaved. The pitch is left on for three days, and then is washed away with elixir of vitroil until the wound is well. The hair that grows out is white.

An old horse is made to appear young by filing down the teeth and removing the dark markings with a hot iron. The depressions over its eyes are removed by puncturing the skin over the cavities and filling them with air from the mouth, forced in through a tube.—New York Sun.

What His Good Intentions Cost.

There was just one vacant seat in the Wabash avenue cable-car when a woman carrying a large basket and leading a small boy by the hand came in and took the seat. She placed the basket carefully in her lap and let the boy stand leaning against her—an arrangement that suited everybody except the boy.

"I 'ant to sit there," he bawled, trying to push his mother aside.

"Look out, Johnny! you'll break them eggs," remonstrated the woman.

"Don't care if I do!" sobbed Master Johnny.

"I'll make you care!" answered his mother, sharply. "Five dozen eggs, an' every last one of 'em fresh!"

His answer was a kick aimed at the basket. A man sitting opposite here interposed.

"Come, my little man, and sit on my knee."

"Ain't a-goin' to sit on your knee," and the youngster kicked the eggs again.

"I just wish I had you home. Wouldn't I lay it on!" said his mother. "I'd trounce you right here if I knew what to do with this 'ere basket."

"I'll hold the basket, ma'am," said the man opposite.

He reached over and took it. Everybody hoped to see Johnny get his deserts, and a hush of expectancy fell on that car. But what that scheming woman did was to pick up the boy, cuddle him in her arms, and give him a comfortable seat in her lap. And the little wretch smiled at the general discomfiture, while the man opposite let the basket of eggs jounce as they would, and glared with murderous ferocity at Johnny and his mother.—Chcago Tribune.

Marking Linen.

The marking of linen is quite a business in these days of sumptuous trousseaus. In stores which make a specialty of fine napery orders are taken for the working of letters when the linen is selected, so that it can be sent home in boxes ready for use. One fiancee will choose two unpretentious initials placed side by side and worked in plain raised satin stitch. Another chooses larger letters, to be intricately interlaced and elaborately worked with both solid and open laced stitches. Huge ornamental monograms are also conspicuous in napery and bed linen, as well as on tea cloths. Three letters are a good rule in case of house linen, one for the respective initials of the Christian name of the bride and groom and the third for the family name.

The Strings.

Smart Girl—Mr. Nicefellow, this is my little sister, Miss Ella. What do you wish, pet? Why are you regarding the gentleman so intently?

Little Sister—I was looking for the strings, that's all.

"Strings? What strings?"

"Why, mamma said you had two strings to your beau."—Foster.

The Last Stage.

"Is Miss Oldly out of the matrimonial market yet?"

"No, but she's on the remnant counter."—Detroit Free Press.

"I am as lonesome as Canton, Ohio," said a man at the depot this morning, after seeing his best girl off on a train.

PLAYIN' POSSUM.

"Playin' possum" comes from the fact that the possum will feign sleep or death when pushed into sudden danger of being captured. But pains and aches never play that kind of a game. They never try to fool anybody, and go to work to wake up people, leaving no chance to feign sleep. On the other hand, there is a remedy known as St. Jacobs Oil that will lull a pain or an ache so that it won't wake up again in the cure that follows its use. Pains and aches are great or less in intensity just in degree as we treat them. Prompt treatment with the best remedy—St. Jacobs Oil—prevents their increase and by curing prevents their return. Everything is gained by taking pains and aches in time for a prompt and permanent cure, and there is nothing better than the use of St. Jacobs Oil.

Stories of Prinsep.

Mr. Valentine Prinsep, the well known English artist, is a very jolly Briton indeed, and is fond of telling amusing stories about himself and his profession. Even his name proves a source of mirth, and he likes to relate the blunders its oddity has occasioned. Once, when going to dine at a fashionable mansion, he was accosted by the butler:

"What name, sir?"

"Prinsep."

Great was the big artist's amusement when he was then announced loudly and pompously as Prince Hepp!

Mr. Prinsep's favorite anecdote is one often told, but always good, of which he claims to be the original narrator. Moreover, it is a true one. An old country couple, so he relates, had strayed into the Manchester Art gallery, catalogue in hand, and were wandering from room to room looking at the pictures, which were numbered anew, one, two, three and so on in each division, instead of continuously throughout the whole exhibition. The two old people stopped in awe and admiration before Madox Brown's heroic picture, the "Death of King Lear."

"Wha's this un, Jinny?" asked the old man.

"A'll see, Jarge, A'll see, ef ye'll give me a minute."

The old lady hastily turned to the catalogue division of another room, and read off the number corresponding to that of the picture before them. It chanced to be that of Landseer's famous picture of a collie fallen over a cliff, and just reached by the anxious shepherd, who calls the result of his examination of the poor beast's injuries to his comrades on the rocks above. She read off the title of the picture to her husband:

"There's Life In the Old Dog Yet."

Looking compassionately on the pictured form of the aged and forsaken king, Jarge failed to perceive anything wrong in the name.

"So there is, gal, so there is!" he exclaimed, in a burst of pity; adding, with dropped voice and a shake of the head at Lear, "but not much, not much!"—Youth's Companion.

From statistics recently published it appears that the dowries now given by French parents on the marriage of their children are becoming more slender. French parents are beginning to adopt the system of giving children away in marriage freely, without haggling over financial considerations.

CHEAP IRRIGATION.

The Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, Cal., the largest builders of gas, gasoline and oil engines on the Coast, are making extensive preparations for the season's business.

They are filling several orders for large irrigating plants and as this line of their business increases each season, it is safe to say the farmers throughout the State are appreciating the advantages of irrigation with water pumped by this cheap power.

The Hercules Works are at present building an 80 H. P. engine for Geo. F. Packer, Colusa, which will raise 6000 gallons per minute from the river and distribute it over his land. This will be the largest gasoline pumping plant in existence.

A Woman Talks on Woman's Ills.

The Sex Shuns Publicity on Their Own Weaknesses from Sense of False Modesty.

From the Times, Los Angeles, Cal.

Women suffer from certain diseases peculiar to their sex, and usually have great delicacy in speaking of such ills. Just why, we cannot say. There would seem to be no more reason for silence in such matters than there is about the ordinary every day ills. Occasionally, however, a woman of strong sense is found, and is an exception to the rule. Such a one is Mrs. Rosie S. Thompson, of 319 East First Street, Los Angeles, Cal. This is what she says:

"For five or six years I was seriously ill with female complaint. I could not go about, I suffered intense pain, and at times I was hardly able to raise myself up in bed. I was then living in San Bernardino and I consulted a physician who thought he could cure me. For seven months I was under his care taking his prescriptions, but he did me no good at all, and I grew worse instead of better. Finally I tried another physician and I was under his care for several months but he did me no more good than the first one. I tried all sorts of remedies without any benficial effects.

"Finally I saw an advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and I resolved to try them. I began taking the pills. The effect was wonderful. Almost immediately I began to improve. I have taken these pills now for six or seven months and I am entirely cured. I had previously tried every sort of remedy that I could think of, besides consulting many doctors, and nothing helped me until I took these pills. They are the best remedy I ever used, and the only one I would recommend. I am now as well as I ever was in my life and have had no return of my complaint

"I make this statement voluntarily and in the hope that it may lead others now suffering as I suffered to try these pills.

"This statement is given solely with a view to helping others and directing their attention to the greatest medical discovery of the age—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

Brooding Small Chicks.

As a substitute for expensive brooders, this device illustrated in Farm and Home, will make a good home for early hatched chicks. It is 2½ feet square and about the same height in front, while behind it is enough shorter to give the shed roof a nice pitch. Nearly the entire front is glass, beneath which is a place for chicks to pass in and out. This can be closed when desired by a slide door as shown in the illustration. A curtain is let down over the sash during the night and rolled up out of the way in the day time. It is warmed by a common barn lantern which is held in position by a square box, which extends through the roof, and also serves as a ventilator. The cap of the ventilator is adjustable, permitting the lantern to be taken out and put in at pleasure. The ventilator is perforated at the base to permit the heat to radiate through the room, and also near the top to allow the gases from the burning oil to escape. The entire bottom is arranged to slide in and out as a drawer, so it may be taken out and cleaned, which should be done every day. It costs but a dollar or so, according to material used.

The Corn Crop.

Mr. J. J. Chandler, of Solomon, Iowa, raised four thousand bushels of corn last season, and, after disposing of it, found it had netted him fifty-three and three-quarters cents per bushel. Where did he sell it? He did not sell it. He fed it to cattle. His account stands:

Sept. 1, 1896, 101 head of cattle cost in Omaha	$3,667 60
Cost of driving same home	9 85
Interest on money	71 47
Total	$3,748 92
Dec. 22, 1896, sold 101 cattle in Chicago, net	6,147 57
Balance	$2,398 65

Amount of corn fed, four thousand bushels; net per bushel, fifty-three and three-quarter cents.

How much better than selling his corn crop for what he could get for it. And the $2,398.65 does not represent the entire net profit. Hogs were fattened with the cattle and brought in additional dollars, and the manure from the herd for the four months they were fattening is also worth a good many dollars to Mr. Chandler's farm. It is brains that count on the farm.—Farm News.

Movable Feed Rack.

A sketch in the American Agriculturist shows an easily made feed rack, that can be moved from place to place, with the work of but a moment. The construction is plainly shown in the illustration, nothing but narrow strips of board being used in any part. The uprights at the ends are nailed firmly to the rack and have the lower ends sharpened, so that they can be driven into the ground wherever it is desired to set up the rack.

FEED RACK FOR LAMBS AND CALVES.

Damp Weather and Roup.

There is more roup in the spring months than in winter, due to spring rains and dampness. While the drafts of air in the poultry house may not be cold, yet they are damp and chilly, rendering the fowls very uncomfortable. It is at night that fowls seem to take disease. During the day they are active and at work, but at night they cannot change their positions on the roost and are consequently helpless to avoid damp drafts of air. The longer days and warmth at midday induce the fowls to remain outside during the spring season, and they consequently do not always resort to shelter in damp spells. It is then that they are frequently attacked by roup. A little extra attention until dry weather sets in will greatly aid in preventing roup and the liability to disease.

Seed Potatoes.

At the Rhode Island Station fourteen varieties of potatoes of Maine grown and home grown seed were tested during two years on sandy loam soil manured with commercial fertilizers applied on [illegible] sod. Ten pounds of seed of each variety was used, cut in one case to 150 pieces, in the other to two sets, and planted sixteen inches apart in the row. The vines were sprayed for potato blight. Of the merchantable potatoes, the Northern grown seed tubers produced a greater percentage in eleven out of fourteen varieties and a greater yield in nine out of fourteen varieties, the average increase being 17.04 bushels per acre; the home grown tubers gave a greater yield in five out of fourteen varieties, the average increase being 20.94 bushels per acre.

Clover Needs Underdrained Land.

While the country is new clover seed with a little land plaster is sufficient usually to insure a good catch. What is quite as important, the clover grows and makes a good stand, living until it has produced a seed crop, when as clover is biennial it naturally dies. But as the country gets older and its vegetable matter is exhausted by continued cultivation the clover crop becomes more and more uncertain. It is hard to get a good catch, and even when the seeding is all right the clover winter kills badly. Wherever this is the fact it shows that underdraining is needed. Whoever has underdrained a field knows how much more certain the clover seeding and growth is thereafter. With an outlet below for water, and warm air constantly rising from the subsoil, it is easy to make a good seed bed for clover seed and get a good catch. The same conditions also prevent the clover seed and get a good catch. The same conditions also prevent the clover from being winter killed by freezing and thawing in winter and spring.

How to Graft.

Prepare yourself with a sharp knife, a small wedge, a saw, a ladder, cions and wax. Cions will keep best on trees. Cut as wanted until the buds begin to start, then cut, store in cellar covered with damp moss. You are now prepared to graft until apples set.

Graft cherries very early, splitting limb. All limbs must be split before sap starts. After the bark peels, all thick-barked limbs should be set under the bark. Cut tree shape of umbrella, not too far in or out; give room for grafts to grow. Cut cion to a thin one-sided wedge; be careful and take the outer bark off from point, then insert, by peeling bark from wood with point of knife; cut side to heart, two or more in each limb; nick bark back of cion if very thick; spread wax on all cuts and a little down the limb back of cion. When limb is split make a true wedge by cutting both sides, leaving side next to heart thinnest. Have three buds to every cion. Trim the sides of the split smoothly, insert, keep inside bark even. Put on wax and it is done. —Western Rural.

Plantain Weed Seed.

When buying clover seed it is always best to use a microscope to detect weed seeds that of late years have become very plentiful in clover. No one of these weeds is worse than the plantain, or sheep's tongue, as it used to be called from its long, narrow leaves. It has innumerable small, black seeds, much smaller than clover seed. When land is once seeded with the plantain it is almost impossible to get rid of it, as the seed remains in the ground for years only germinating when the plow brings successive strata of seed filled soil to the surface. Both sheep and cattle will eat plantain, though it is less nutritious and palatable than other grasses, and of course much inferior to clover.

Seeds in Apples.

There is great variation in number and size of apple seeds, even in fruit of the same variety. While the small natural fruit has usually the most vigorous seeds, this fact is often due to such trees being isolated, and having larger supplies of potash and other mineral elements than do trees in the orchard. It is known that potash is necessary to grow the seed. It is possible that the liberal use of potash, as a fertilizer, may make fruit seeds plumper and perhaps more numerous. This would only be an advantage to those who wished to plant the seed. In the fruit the seed and its attendant, the core, is commonly thought a necessary nuisance.

Frequent Churning Best.

It is harder work to make the best butter from a one-cow dairy, especially late in the season, when the milk messes. The best butter is made with least expense when the dairy is large enough to require churning every day. This makes a great deal of hard work, unless it impels the dairyman to provide power of some kind, so as to relieve the hard labor. This it generally does. Whenever the dairy is large enough to require churning every day, a creamery or a separator will pay, not only by the saving of labor, but by making more of the cream than is possible by the old process of hand skimming the milk.

Apropos of the gossip about Queen Victoria's ill health, Elwin Barron repeats in the Chicago Times-Herald the rumor that the Prince of Wales will never ascend the British throne. Albert Edward lacks ambition and energy, and many think he has by the conduct of his life forfeited the right to succeed a sovereign of such noble character as Victoria. On the other hand, the Duke of York is very popular, and it is predicted that Victoria will abdicate this year and b[illegible] some King George the Fifth.

THE MATURE BELLE.

Woman's Age of Greatest Charm Is Being Extended.

The ruling woman of the present day is the mature woman. The maiden of bashful 15, the bud of 18, the clear-eyed girl of 20, all must stand aside for their older sister, who leads the procession. The age at which women are supposed to exercise their greatest charm varies with the varying of fashion and taste. In the Elizabethan era it was 14. Other heroines as celebrated in their day and generation as Juliet were the instigators of tragic loves and hates at that extremely juvenile age. Half a century ago, Balzac astonished his countrymen by claiming unusual powers of fascination for the woman of 30. Ever since, she has held the stage as an incarnation of coquettish attraction. At the present day the period of beauty and charm has been extended even further. Blazac's 30 has received an additional ten years. Women of 40 are no longer looked upon as ruins in which the antiquarian may trace relics of bygone splendor. With the vanishing of the term "old maid," the old maid herself has withdrawn into the place of departed spirits. In France an unmarried girl of over 25 is looked upon as dead stock, for which there is nothing but a convent. To-day, in the United States, women of independent means, women of society, women who are self-supporting, rarely marry under 25, and generally put off that episode in their existence five or ten years later.

There are many reasons for the present vogue of the mature belle. She is more attractive, understands human nature better, than her younger sister. She is still good-looking. Her youth lasts longer than it used to, because she has learned how to take care of herself. American women formerly ruined their beauty by bad diet, no exercise, and too little fresh air. Now they know better. A healthy, well-groomed woman, who is not overworked or over-worried, looks about the same age at 40 as she did at 25. With her additional years has come additional wisdom. If she has not the engaging simplicity that was hers at 18, she has a knowledge of men and manners which makes her a more interesting companion, a more lovable human being. Experience has given her the gift of sympathy, of which the young girl feels nothing. To men she has come to represent not only all that is graceful and gracious and tactful in womanhood, but all that is broad and tender and feminine.

Among working women—from the artistic to the plain working woman—the maturer ones are naturally in the ascendant. The young girl among the workers is the novice whom no one knows or cares much about. It is when the years of endeavor have been passed, and mind and heart have reached their fullest powers of comprehension and feeling, that she is at the pinnacle of her development. In these days of hurry and pressure and intensity of effort, such a creature naturally takes precedence over the untried girl who is waiting with expectant eyes for the message of the future. Existence is too full, the struggle too serious, for the return of those days when youth, ignorance, beauty and folly were the great requisites of women. The times are stirring, the pressure of existence desperately earnest, and man in his struggle demands a helpmate, who can assist him onward, not drag him back. Chivalry, in its downfall, carried away many pretty myths, the pretiest the myth of the childwife hanging, frightened and faint-hearted, on her husband's arm.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Regarding a "Close" Shave.

"What makes my face so dry and dusty?" asked a man in one of the chairs at the hotel barber shop.

"You shave too close," replied the barber. "You get down under the skin and irritate it."

"Well, I have to shave close. I don't want to bother with shaving every day, so I get a shave every other day, and then get a good, close one."

"There's no need of that," replied the barber. "There isn't so much difference between a single going-over and a very close shave. After the razor has been over your face once you can still feel a fine stubble. By a second or third scraping you can get the face feeling perfectly smooth, but in three hours' time the beard has grown out to where it was after the first going-over. What I mean is that you save only about three hours by getting what we call a 'close' shave, and for a man who shaves every other day that isn't much of an advantage. Besides, it irritates the face and is liable to make the skin hard and scaly. A man who shaves himself simply goes over his face once, but in a barber shop the customer thinks he is not getting the worth of his money unless the barber scrapes for about ten minutes to get rid of that extra three hours' growth of beard."—Chicago Tribune.

Mountain Sheep.

The Denver News says that mountain sheep appear to be increasing in Colorado, and, stranger still, the rare and timid animals are leaving their dizzy haunts among the high mountain peaks and drawing nearer to the habitations of man than ever before. In the comparatively low lands, near the town of Jefferson, there is now a flock of fifty or more mountain sheep. Jefferson is on the South Park Railroad, about eighty-one miles southwest of Denver, in Park County. It is an old-fashioned community, and has near it the well-known summer resort, Jefferson Lake. The vicinity, disturbed by the rumble of trains, as well as the sounds of human life and industry, is not at all a quiet one. It has none of the characteristics which usually mark the natural home of the almost extinct mountain sheep.

And yet for several days past a band of at least fifty of the soft-eyed, large-horned native sheep of the Rocky Mountains have been calmly grazing around the town of Jefferson and close to the railroads. It is said that the sheep do not display any sign of fear of the Jefferson people. Many of them come in open daylight within easy pistol shot of the residences. They do not run away unless somebody purposely tries to frighten them.

For many years past the sight of a mountain sheep has been a rarity on Colorado, and usually but one at a time has been seen. A hunter far off from civilization might descry a solitary sheep perched on a crag, overlooking some wild and steep canyon, but hardly ever within gunshot range. No such thing as fifty sheep together has been reported, even by the veriest Munchausen of hunters. When a lone sheep was seen it usually disappeared from view at the slightest alarm.

Considering these things, the descent of fifty sheep upon the town of Jefferson, as though they had formed themselves into an excursion party somewhere among the mountains, does not look reasonably explainable. The general theory is that bitter cold and deep snows in the higher altitudes drove them downward, and that they joined together for mutual protection as they traveled from peak to peak. Killing mountain sheep is absolutely prohibited by law in Colorado. It is a closed season all the year round with the animals, just as it is with buffalo.

Lafayette's Visit to America.

Jean Fraley Hallowell, who writes, in the Ladies' Home Journal, of "When Lafayette Rode Into Philadelphia," says that "it is difficult to understand, at this late day, what a furore of excitement passed over this country when Lafayette arrived once more in America. The visit is an historic event to be remembered while memory endures. During President Monroe's second administration the United States extended its invitation to Lafayette. He arrived at Staten Island on August 15 (Sunday), 1824, accompanied by his son, George Washington Lafayette, and also by his son-in-law. A formal reception took place on the following day—the first fruits of the most abundant harvest of welcome which Lafayette was to receive during his year of travel through the United States.

"Lafayette was 67 years old when he visited America as the Nation's guest, and carried his years lightly. His head was shaped like that of Burns. He had a high forehead, long, aquiline nose, and a rather thin face. His hair was sandy and quite plentiful. His eyes were dark gray, restless and twinkling; his eyebrows, light in color, but heavily marked. His mouth was firm, and his lips smiled courteously at the holiday crowd assembled to do him honor. The General was not very tall, but well made. His face was distinctly pleasant, and its expression was an odd mixture of shrewdness, decision and gay good humor. His costume was a swallow-tailed coat and trousers of dark brown, with a great display of white waistcoat and neckcloth. A bunch of seals hung from a broad black ribbon at his waist. Over his shoulders hung a cloth riding-cloak, greenish blue in color and lined with red."

A Bishop's Hat.

We are all sensitive as to our personal identity. Smith doesn't like to be called Jones, and Adams shows a good deal of the "Old Adam" when he is mistaken for an expressman. The London Realm tells a story illustrative of this sensitiveness:

The late Lord Allesbury was standing bareheaded in a well-known hatter's shop in Piccadilly while his hat was being ironed. A bishop—who, being still alive, has not reached his turn for posthumus anecdotes, and must consequently be nameless—entered the shop in full attire, and seeing Lord Allesbury bareheaded, mistook him for a shopman.

Taking off his own head-covering, the Bishop said, "I want to know if you have a hat like this?"

Lord Allesbury surveyed the hat and its owner, and turned on his heel with the curt remark:

"No, I haven't; and if I had, I'd be hung before I'd wear it."

A Foul-Air Recorder.

A foul-air indicator, which is expected to record bad atmosphere as the thermometer does the temperature, has recently been introduced in Zurich, Switzerland. The apparatus consists of a tube filled with a red liquid, below which a cord is hung tightened by a weight. This liquid has the property of changing its color when acted upon by impure air. The liquid is allowed to flow along the cord at the rate of one drop every hundred seconds. As the drop runs down the cord it changes color, becoming white at the end. The exact condition of the air is shown by a scale placed alongside the cord, divided into degrees marked "extremely bad," "very bad," "passable" and "pure."

The Reason.

"Well, little chap," said the stranger in the family, picking up one of the children, "what are you going to be when you're a man?"

"Nuffin,'" said the child.

"Nothing? Why so?" asked the stranger.

"Because," said the child, "I'm only a little girl."—Harper's Round Table.

THE electric match is the next important invention promised. Before very long the phosphorus-tipped wooden splints now in use will be replaced by a handy little tool that may be carried in the pocket or hung up conveniently for striking a light when wanted.

The portable electric lighter is bound to come. Meanwhile, inventors, as shown by the records of the patent office, exercise much ingenuity in trying to improve on the common, every-day match. Not least interesting is a spherical match—a little ball of wood pulp covered with phosphorus composition. In using it a holder is required, inasmuch as there is no stick, the ignited wood pulp burning slowly until wholly consumed. Thus there is no residue of stick and tar to be disposed of, and matches of this kind have the further advantage that they are cheap and can be packed in very small compass-like pills. A perfumed match has been patented, the stick being dipped in oil of cassia. Of course, there are ever so many odd sorts of matches actually in use to-day—as, for example, the wax matches, which are employed in Europe to an extent vastly greater than in this country. Most of the wax matches are manufactured in Italy and Great Britain. They are made by drawing strands of fine cotton thread, twenty or thirty at a time, through melted stearine. This hardens quickly, and the tapers are rounded by pulling them through perforated iron plates. It then remains only to cut them into proper lenghts and dip them into an igniting composition.

It is an odd fact that even at the present day patents are sought for pipe-lighting contrivances in which flint and steel are utilized with mechanical modifications. It is probable that citizens of the United States use more matches than any other people in the world. Every man, woman and child in this country, taking the average, consumes eight matches every day in the year.

Pine and aspen are the woods which furnish most of the material for match sticks. The logs are cut into blocks fifteen inches long, representing the length of seven matches. Freed from bark, the block is put into a lathe with a cutting tool, by which a continuous strip of veneer is turned off, just the thickness of a match. Thus the whole block is converted into a sheet fifteen inches wide, which is cut, incidentally to the same process, into seven ribbons, the width of each being just the length of a match. The ribbons are fed, 100 at a time, into a machine which chops them into sticks. Then the sticks are dried in heated drums, sifted to get rid of splinters, bundled by machinery and dipped in the combustible mixture. From the felled tree to the finished match, everything is done by machinery. Women fill the match box at the rate of thirty-six gross in ten hours.

Truly it would seem out of the question to get along without matches; yet they were unknown sixty-five years ago. There must have been a time when early man knew not how to make fire, and some very primitive tribes to-day have not that knowledge. Savages quite generally believe that fire actually dwells in wood and stone, because from those substances it can be obtained by friction or by striking. Some savages are able to make a fire with two sticks in a fraction of a minute, whereas the Ainos of Japan require two hours to accomplish the same feat. One of the queerest ways of making fire is practiced by the Malays, who cut a V-shaped slit in a branch of the oil tree and saw at it with a knife-edged stick of ironwood. In three minutes the sawdust thus produced becomes incandescent, and tinder is applied. The ignited tinder is wrapped in dry grass and whirled around the head of the operator until it is in a flame.

The first practical friction matches were made in 1827 by an English apothecary named Walker, who coated splinters of cardboard with sulphur and tipped them with a mixture of sulphur of antimony, chlorate of potash and gum. The modern lucifer match combines in one instrument arrangements for creating a spark, catching it on tinder and starting a blaze—steps requiring separate operations in primitive contrivances. It was in 1836 that the first United States patent for friction matches was issued.

GLADSTONE RIDES A BIKE.

England's Grand Old Man Takes to Cycling at the Age of 88.

Gladstone has taken to the bicycle! Gladstone, England's "Grand Old Man," the greatest statesman of the century, the prime minister of all prime ministers, a hardy giant at 88, may now be seen on any fine day, gliding over the smooth roads about Hawarden Castle on a swift-flying wheel of the latest approved pattern.

Where is there to be found another man of his age who would not totter in palsied dread at the mere thought of such youthful athletic revelry. Indeed there are few men at half his age who would not declare against the sport as one that they had far outgrown in years, so that apart from the fact that a man of Gladstone's world-wide fame has taken to cycling, it is really a marvelous performance for one so old. The great diplomat has fallen under the magic spell of the bicycle and is now an enthusiastic supporter of the fad. No more the long walk up hill and down dale, for which he is celebrated. No more the vigorous use of the keen-edged ax on some fallen tree trunk. The bicycle has replaced both as a means of outdoor exercise. And in the latter game he may be looked to excel, for at either of the former tasks he was par excellent.

His Face the Sole Guide.

Policeman Thomas F. Harrigan is one of the most conspicuous of the splendid force of bluecoats that protect pedestrians and straighten out the traffic tangles on Broadway, New York. Some time ago I noticed a passer-by take a snap shot at him with his camera. A few days ago there arrived at the New York postoffice a letter with only a photograph for an address. The officials were puzzled, but the letter was handed around among the carriers. One of them recognized the picture.

"That's big Tom Harrigan at Broadway and 28th street," he said.

And so the letter was delivered. The contents proved to be a mounted photograph of the policeman with the words, "Compliments of S. H. Rous, Chamberino, Donna Ana County, N. M., on the back.

Not knowing the policeman's name Mr. Rous used this novel way in forwarding the photograph, and, thanks to the letter carrier's powers of observation, it was safely and promptly delivered.

A WOMAN GOLD HUNTER.

She Has Been One Fifty Years and Saves Half She Finds.

Mary Odom, gold hunter, lives in a little cabin on the mountain side about a mile from Auraria, the ancient mining town of North Georgia, whose best days were those prior to the discovery of gold in California in 1849, says a dispatch in the New York Sun. The cabin was built by a miner named Odom, and when the excitement in California began he bade his wife and daughter Mary, then a girl of 12 years old, farewell, and started West. His family never heard from him again.

His wife managed to support herself, and, having some knowledge of gold mining, taught her daughter Mary how to wash the golden grains from the sand in the beds of the mountain streams. The two were quite successful, and gathered a great deal of gold dust. When Mary was 16 years old her mother died. That was in 1852, and the United States mint was still in operation at Dahlonega. Mary soon grew expert in finding gold, and many a pennyweight did she carry to the mint. Having disposed of it, she secreted invariably half her profits in the cabin at the mouth of the gulch above Auraria.

The war came on and the mint was broken up and for four years Mary Odom had a hard time of it. The Confederate Government needed all the money it could get, and the tithe gatherers made frequent visits to her cabin in search of gold; but she was able to keep her hoard hidden. After the war matters settled down a little, and when she was assured of the protection of the civil authorities she went about her work boldly and devoted all the time she could spare from the cultivation of her little patch of cleared land to the business of gold hunting.

The richest deposits had been worked over so much that they were not so profitable as they had been when she first began to wash gold in the mountain streams. She lived very frugally and raised her own crops of corn, cabage and potatoes, and spun and wove her own clothing. She has always kept up the habit of putting aside half her findings, whether they were large or small. Sometimes her washings would not amount to much during the week, but if she secured only 50 cents she would put aside a quarter and spend the rest, piecing out her wants by going into debt. She is now in her sixty-first year, and she has hoarded away a sock filled with gold dust, which she has shown to some of her most trusted friends, and is worth several thousand dollars. Still she keeps at work, and on any fair day, when not busy about her cabin, she may be seen trampling over the hills in search of gold. She will tuck up her homespun skirt and stand knee deep in the chill waters of the mountain streams all day long washing the sand and gathering up the shining particles.

"It ain't so easy as it wer' forty years ago," she said as she smoothed back her iron gray locks from her forehead, "but I kin make a purty good livin' out'n it yit. I've seed the day when I could wash out from four to five pennyweights a week, but I hardly ever strike sich a streak as that nowadays. I 'spected pap to come home old an' po' fur years a'ter he lef' fur California, but I done gin up all hopes now. I seed so many o' them po' ol' fellers come back broke down thought nothin' to live on 'at I thought I'd save up part of all I foun' so's to he'p 'im out w'en he come back, an' that's how I come to save up my little pile. The Lord knows hit's little 'nough, in spite o' what folks say 'bout me bein' a rich 'oman an' all sich as that."

Seeing and Believing.

It is an old and a wise saying that "seeing is believing," yet everybody knows that very often what we see, and therefore believe, proves to be not really true at all. As we grow older, finding that our eyes have so frequently deceived us, we are often not satisfied with the evidence they give us until we have verified it by touch or smell or hearing or taste, or by looking at some doubtful thing from different points of view, or under a different lighting.

We are not willing to believe that a conjurer actually draws rabbits from a man's ear or coins from the tip of his nose just because our eyes tell us such tales. Sometimes our deceptions are so lasting that things must be made wrong in order to look right, which seems rather contradictory. If we look at the letter S or the figure 8 as carefully as we can, the upper and lower halves sem to be almost exactly the same size. If we turn them upside down, the difference in the size of the loops is quite astonishing, and we wonder how we could have been so mistaken; yet perhaps the truth is that the loops are neither so different nor so much alike as they seem to be, as we see when we look at them turned upon their sides.—St. Nicholas.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR, ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JUNE 18 1897

It is getting to be quite a fad to talk up a celebration of the diamond jubilee of Queen Victoria in different parts of this country. It would be more in taste for America and England as well to settle the matter of the starving thousands of British subjects in India before wasting money or sentimenton jubilees.

Anent the question of investigating the charges of corruption in the Senate on the Sugar Trust, Senator Tillman pointedly said: "We cannot afford to lie back on our dignity and say it is beneath us to investigate charges of this character. If we have corrupt and debauched men in here, owned by trusts and corporations, we ought to find out who they are and purge the Senate."

In Pittsburg 2500 men are out on a strike. The McKinley wages offered them are not entirely satisfactory, and they have resolved to "stand firm for the old wages." What about that "protection to American workingmen," "steady employment at good wages," "restoration of confidence," etc., that we were to have just as soon as the Republicans got control of the Government? It seems rather queer that men in Pennsylvania who are employed in protected industries should have to strike in order to keep their wages up to what they were before the Republicans got control of the Government.

The Eastern dispatches continue to show how the waves are rising throughout the country. Here is the latest pointer from Peoria, Illinois:

"The coal miners at Minook have been on a strike since May 1st. During last week a few men have been working against the wishes of the majority. Today while Superintendent A. W. Morgan and one of the bosses were escorting some men to work a crowd of miners interfered. A fight ensued, and Morgan and the boss commenced to shoot, killing instantly a young married miner named John Wetoski and wounding another. This so enraged the miners that they attacked Morgan and the boss with clubs and stones and beat them badly. Morgan may not live. The town is excited and there is no telling where the trouble may end."

Good Times Have Not Come.

On the 18th of June, 1896, McKinley was nominated for the presidency and he was heralded as the advance agent of prosperity, the time of feasting and rejoicing to be ushered in immediately after his election. The day of election came. The apostle of protection was chosen. "Confidence" was about to be "restored," prosperity to dawn. Capital—whose traditional timidity had been constantly manifested during the previous years—was to gain courage and emerge from its hiding place to seek investment, the one particularly desirable thing for the American people.

However, there was an inexplainable delay, and the date for loud acclaim and the going of hats into the air was postponed until March 4th, inauguration day. Surely, then said the prophets, would come the end of the depression that had been the cause of so much unnecessary suffering.

McKinley lived to be inaugurated and Dingley lived to formulate his bill. Both the President and the bill have occupied the attention of the country for months. Both have been given hopeful consideration by the people who have believed that in the combination of the two—capital's trusted representative and capital's favorite measure—would be found the solution of the bitter problem.

But hope seems fast departing if the spirit of Mayor Rice's statement is any indication. Mr. Rice is chief executive of Mr. McKinley's home city, Canton, Ohio, and Sunday in an interview he said:

"There never has been anything like this in Ohio before. There are hundreds of families in Canton to-day who are suffering for want of food and clothing. Things are getting worse. In three months this year I have spent out of my private purse for food and coal and clothing to give away more than my year's salary as Mayor. The factories are cutting down wages and reducing their forces. Many of them are not operating more than three days a week; most of them are running without a profit. Farm land that has been worth $100 an acre cannot be sold for $30 an acre. It is almost impossible to borrow money on real estate because the prices sink and sink. The farmers and workingmen are deserting the Republican party by the wholesale. The Republicans cannot hide the evidences of distress here. They are to be seen everywhere. I know of scores of men who are insolvent and who continue in business simply because their creditors do not dare to act. And, in spite of this terrible condition of things, the Republican party contents itself with postponement of its private political debts in the form of a tariff bill."

The Durrant and Worden T...

The complications in which the ... of Durrant and Worden have become ... volved are calculated to confuse a practitioner of the law, and would certainly bewilder the average layman. Durrant, after being tried by the Superior Court of San Francisco County, was sentenced by Judge Murphy, and from this verdict he appealed to the Supreme Court. The judgment of the lower court was confirmed, but the time originally fixed for the execution of the sentence had passed, and Durrant was brought before Judge Bahrs for a new date to be fixed. From this order, fixing June 11th for the execution, a second appeal to the Supreme Court was taken, upon the ground that Jukge Bahrs was not the trial judge, and therefore not competent to pass sentence. This appeal is still pending. In the meantime, a petition was presented to the Governor for a pardon, which was refused.

A new chapter began with the attempt of Durrant's attorneys to carry the case into the Federal courts. A writ of habeas corpus was applied for before the Circuit Court, on the grounds that Durrant had not received a fair trial because of prejudice created by the newspaper comments before and during the trial, and that the case had been tried on an "information" instead of an indictment found by a grand jury. The application was promptly denied by Judges Gilbert and Morrow, and the consent of the Circuit Court to an appeal to the Supreme Court, which is required under the court rules, was applied for. This was granted, and a citation was issued to Warden Hale to appear before the Supreme Court on August 3d to show cause why the decision of the Circuit Court should not be sustained. This date was fixed because it is customary to make returns on appeals to the Supreme Court within sixty days, but it is understood that the case will not be heard before the October term.

The case having thus gained a footing in the Federal courts, the question arose as to what effect this would have upon carrying out of the sentence. The final determination of the matter in the Supreme Court at Washington could not be reached until after the day fixed for execution. The revised statutes provide that, pending an appeal from a decision of the Circuit Court upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus, any proceeding against the person so imprisoned by or under the authority of any State for any matter pending under the writ, shall be deemed null and void until the final determination of the application. This provision is held to suspend the execution until the Supreme Court renders its decision. The Worden case stands in a similar position, except that applications for writs were made in the District and Circuit courts, and appeals were taken from both orders denying the applications to both the Circuit Courts of Appeals and to the Supreme Court. Whether sentence in both cases can be indefinitely suspended by a succession of appeals depends upon whether there is time to perfect an appeal between the order of the trial court resentencing and the day fixed for execution. The date fixed for execution in the original order must be not less than sixty nor more than ninety days after sentence. Where the sentence is not executed on the day fixed and remains in force, the court may order its execution at any subsequent date without limitation as to the intervening time.

The Governor has now reprieved Durrant until July 9th, to give time for a writ of mandamus to be issued by the State court, ordering Warden Hale to execute Durrant on the day set. The courts of last resort in this State have approved the decisions finding both men guilty of murder. This attempt on the part of the murderers' attorneys to defeat the law is, of course, justifiable from their point of view. But the people of the State of California do not share their view. We think that the officers of the courts of California should proceed to execute these men on the days fixed. The Federal authorities will not stop them. The point in view is not saving the necks of Durrant and Worden, but construing a Federal statute. And the U. S. Supreme Court will construe the statute, whether Durrant and Worden be dead or alive.

There has been formed in Chicago an association calling itself "The British-America Queen Victoria Coronation and Anniversary Medallion Presentation Corporation." It intends to congratulate the Queen on her jubilee, present her with a medal and ask her to pardon Mrs. Maybrick. If the name can be used as a pole it will be long enough to reach every persimmon aimed at.

NOTICE No. 309.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, Independence, Cal. May 5, 1897.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT R. C. Chambers, whose residence and post office address is Salt Lake City, Utah, by A. A. Neil, his Attorney in fact has made application for a United States Patent for the Senator Lode mining claim, situate in Union Mining District, Inyo County, California, consisting of 1,500 linear feet of the lode and surface ground 600 feet wide, being Lot No. 40 and described in the field notes and plat of the official survey on file in this office, with magnetic variation at 15 degrees 46 minutes east, as follows:

Commencing at the Southeast corner of the claim, from which corner, the corner to Sections 1, 2, 11 and 12, T. 12, S. R. 34 E. bears South 74 deg. ¼ W. 228.50 ch. distant, and running thence North 38 deg. E 22.72 ch. 1500 ft. to the Northeast corner, from which corner a block of granite marked X bears South 6 deg. ¾ E. 2.75 ch. distant, and running thence North 56 deg. ¼ W. 9.09 ch. 600 ft. to the Northwest corner, thence South 38 deg. W. 22.72 ch. 1,500 ft. to the Southwest corner; thence South 38 deg. W. 22.72 ch. 1500 ft. to the Southwest corner; thence South 56 deg. ¼ E. 9.09 ch. 600 ft. to the Southeast corner the place of beginning, containing an area of 20.58 acres, all of which is claimed and applied for. The lode line of the Senator runs from a stone mound on the Southerly endline of the claim North 38 deg. E. 22.72 ch. 1500 ft. to a point on the northerly endline of the claim, marked old location monument on the official plat. DIED.

SPRATT—Near Big Pine, on June 13, 1897, Eda Vera Spratt, aged 2 years, 9 months, 4 days.

CALEFF.—At Big pine, Cal., June 13, 1897, Mrs. Hannah Caleff, aged 73 years, 11 months, 16 days.

Deceased was a native of Crowland, Lincolnshire, England. She leaves husband, three daughters and one son to mourn her loss. Her daughters are Mrs. Wm. McDonald and Mrs. Wm. Jenkins of Bishop and Mrs. D. W. Pitman of Big Pine; her son, J. R. Eldred of Big Pine.

On Sunday, June 20, religious service will be held as follows:

Lone Pine, at 11 a. m.

George's Creek, at 2:30 p. m.

Independence, at 7:30 p. m. Children's Day entertainment.

A very interesting programme will be rendered at the M. E. Church consisting of recitations, songs and solos by the children and choir. The Children's Day collection will be taken at the close. Everybody invited; come and fill the house and encourage the children who will take part.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

H. C. Bellows came up from Olancha yesterday morning.

Independence celebrates the Fourth of July on Monday, the 5th.

S. G. Sneden Esq. came down from Bishop last Monday, returning next day.

R. P. Hession came down from Big Pine Wednesday, returning yesterday.

Frank Leach, journalist, of Oakland, is to be Superintendent of San Francisco Mint.

Mr. Durrant, murderer, has had his sentence commuted by Governor Budd to July 9.

J. J. Gunn came in from Minnietta last Saturday and left for San Francisco Tuesday morning.

Haying is in full blast in this vicinity and from present indications some of it will get wet.

Supt. Hoskins will close down the Reward on the Fourth and give the boys a chance for a good time.

Gooseberries, blackberries, currants and raspberries are ripe, though the market is not overstocked as yet.

The Harmony orchestra will give a grand ball in the Pavilion on Monday evening, July 5th; tickets $1 50. See ad.

Sheriff Given has had the Courthouse grounds newly cleaned up and is getting them in condition for the Fourth of July picnic.

Mr. John Baxter is gathering the first honey of the season. A sample of it proves that it is the choicest of its kind, clear, crisp and of the finest flavor.

Messrs. Given, Yandell and Showalter report having had good sport in Cottonwood Creek. The water is too high yet for real good fishing, but they did very well.

Sam Gruber and Gilbert Christy got back yesterday from Coso Springs. Gilbert looks much improved from his trip, but Sam fell into a pool of hot water and got badly burned.

Randsburg people would enjoy the snow water which courses in crystal streams through Independence from the Sierras. The price of water at the bonanza town has been advanced from 20 cents to 40 cents per barrel.

Bar No. 36, valued at $1000, was shipped from the Reward this week. Owing to the hot weather, the cable became too slack and it was necessary to tighten it by setting out the angles. This has been done and it is now running in good order.

A party will go up to Onion Valley next week for the purpose of examining the Kearsarge trail with a view to repairing it. It is proposed to build a new trail around the steps, the only dangerous point on the trail, and also to repair it near the summit.

The little daughter of Sam Spratt died at Big Pine on Sunday last of cholera morbus, caused by eating cherries. Dr. Dorrence had her sent to the mountains and did all he could for her, but she passed away shortly after reaching the higher altitude. She was 3 years old.

Miss Maggie Bunney celebrated her thirteenth birthday yesterday by entertaining her little friends at her home from 2 p. m. till 8 p. m. Ice cream, fruit and cake were served and games played until dark, when a weary, happy flock of children wended their way home.

The Hawaiian Islands, in the opinion of those qualified to speak, are to be annexed to the United States, a majority of the Senate being favorable to the project. The President is said to favor it also. In the event of annexation, the Chinese and Japanese in Hawaii will not be allowed to enter the United States.

FOURTH OF JULY.

A Fourth of July meeting was held at the Courthouse Tuesday evening, and the subscription committee reported good progress. It was decided the same committee have general charge of the programme and management. A list of sports has been prepared and will be found elsewhere. The literary programme has not yet been decided upon. A picnic will be given in the Courthouse grove, in which all are invited to participate. The committee will arrange tables and put the grounds in suitable condition. Everybody should bring their lunch baskets and join in a general good time. In the morning a baseball game will be played between the Reward and Independence nines. This will be followed by the literary exercises in the grove. Lunch will then be spread under the trees and jolly social intercourse enjoyed until the cool of the afternoon, when the children's sports will be held. Additions will be made to the programme next week, and many impromptu features added on the day. In the evening a grand ball will be given in the largest hall in the county, and with good music provided. The citizens of Independence are requested to resolve themselves into a committee of the whole and labor to make the affair a complete success. The Fourth of July is essentially a children's day, and lessons in patriotism instilled in childhood become a fixed habit with growth. Stirring recitations and speeches listened to by youthful ears are never forgotten, and the dry, school history of national events becomes more real when reiterated by a fluent speaker beneath waving banners and the unfurling of "Old Glory."

The Silver Peak Mines.

The San Francisco papers report that a sale has been made of the Silver Peak mines, but as the published stories are palpably inaccurate in many particulars, the chances are that they were hatched in the fertile brain of the city space writers. According to the best information we can get, there are two separate parties bidding for this property. John W. Mackay is at the head of one syndicate, and he is negotiating for the mines through L. J. Hanchett, and is acting on the report of George D. Roberts and Professor Maynard.

The other syndicate is said to consist of James B. Haggin and a son-in-law of John I. Blair, the owner of the mines. They are acting on the report of experts Womble and Hague, and are dealing directly with Mr. Blair.

There is no doubt that either party is amply able to buy the mines, and as they are all experienced mining men, it is to be hoped that the sale may be consummated. There is no doubt that this is the greatest mining property on the coast, and if it is worked in a manner at all commensurate with its extent, it will give employment to several hundred miners and be instrumental in reviving work in many other adjacent mines, which, owing to the present meager milling facilities, are unable to work at a profit.

The successful working of the Silver Peak mines will necessitate the expenditure of perhaps a quarter of a million dollars in preliminary work—such as getting water to the mines, erecting big mills, building roads, etc. The bidders for the property are fully aware of this, and they are able and evidently willing to make the investment.

Unhappily, there are some annoying obstacles in the way in the shape of law suits. Young Mr. Hanchett informs the S. F. Post that he and his father have brought suit against Mr. Blair for $900,000 for money expended and loss from Blair's alleged failure to give an indisputable title, thus preventing the Hanchetts from selling the mines. In return Blair has sued the Hanchetts for $200,000 damages for bad mining.

L. J. Hanchett also had Experts Womble and Hague arrested for housebreaking, and Womble retaliates by arresting Hanchett for threats against life. These various suits have all grown out of the struggle for possession of the property, and it is difficult to foretell how the matter will end.—Walker Lake Bulletin.

From Ballarat.

Wm. Callaway, Dave Rogers and Robert Arnold got in yesterday from the new town of Ballarat. Mr. Callaway will load a big train with grain and other supplies and return immediately. He has opened a hotel and restaurant in Ballarat and is doing very well. He states that capitalists are becoming largely interested in that section of country and its future prospect is excellent. Thomas Pheby, a well-known mining man, has bought property amounting to $90,000 and has put a large force of men at development work, and has teams engaged in hauling in supplies and machinery. The Ballarat people are extremely anxious to get a mail route established, the nearest postoffice being at Darwin, forty miles distant. It now seems certain that the camp will be a fixture, and mail facilities should certainly be obtained.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. Va., and one of the most widely known men in the State, was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June, 1894, Evans, then salesman for the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size, and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Orin Dalton to Frank B. Willetts—Ontario, Chief of the Hill, Maggie and Skate mines, in Panamint mining district; consideration $5.

Frank B. Willetts to Elizabeth Hamlet—Lot in town of Ballarat; consideration $200.

A most unusual windstorm prevailed throughout the valley during the early part of the week. A vast amount of damage was done to fruit trees and growing crops. The weather to-day is quite cold and has been so all the week. Nothing of the kind has ever been known in the valley before et this season of the year.

Hundreds of thousands have been induced to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy by reading what it has done for others, and having tested its merits for themselves are to-day its warmest friends. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Phil Cartier returned to Independence on Wednesday's train, after an absence of two years spent in Montana. Phil has done a great deal of prospecting in Mazurka Canyon and proposes to go to work there again.

WARMTH FOR COMFORT.

An old cat loves a sunny corner and a long nap, and this is natural and wise. The genial warmth of the sun lulls to rest, and while asleep, it may be curative to the cat's few ailments. Soreness and stiffness come upon us suddenly and put the machinery of the body out of gear. St. Jacobs Oil goes suddenly to work upon the trouble, and with its warmth, like warmth to the old cat, it lulls the pain to sleep, drives out the cold, softens the stiffened muscles, lubricates the machinery, and in a short time puts the whole body in good working order. Soreness and stiffness are not much to cure by the use of St. Jacobs Oil, but, if neglected, they take the form of rheumatism, which gives a great deal more pain.

Thirty-two Times For Peace.

Schoolteaching seems to be the most popular of all the fields that are open to college women. In 1890 there were in the United States 735 women who were professors in colleges and universities.

At one time during the life of John Bright there were no fewer than seven members of his family with seats in the house of commons.

PHYSICIANS WISE IN THEIR GENERATION.

The above class of scientists recognize and have repeatedly borne testimony to the efficacy of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a remedy and preventive of fever and ague, rheumatism, want of vigor, liver complaint, and some other ailments and infirm conditions of the system. Experience and observation have taught them its value. They but echo the verdict long since pronounced by the public and the press. Only the benighted now are ignorant of America's tonic and alterative.

"How time flies as one gets older!" "Yes; when I was a clerk on salary the time did not pass half so rapidly as it does now; I am in business with notes to meet."

All ailments arising from a disordered stomach, torpid liver and constipated bowels are quickly cured by using Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters.

CHEAP IRRIGATION.

The Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, Cal., the largest builders of gas, gasoline and oil engines on the Coast, are making extensive preparations for the season's business.

They are filling several orders for large irrigating plants and as this line of their business increases each season, it is safe to say the farmers throughout the State are appreciating the advantages of irrigation with water pumped by this cheap power.

The Hercules Works are at present building an 80 H. P. engine for Geo. F. Packer, Colusa, which will raise 6000 gallons per minute from the river and distribute it over his land. This will be the largest gasoline pumping plant in existence.

To thoroughly eradicate the taint of hereditary disease from the system use Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters.

Then she said, "He is not fit to die."

understand, fool, that he is worth 5 crowns? And listen! It is too late now. They are here!"

A blow fell on the door as he spoke, and he stepped toward it. But at that despair moved her, and she threw herself upon him and for a moment wrestled with him. At last, with an effort, he flung her off, and brandishing his weapon in her face kept her at bay. "You vixen!" he cried savagely, retreating to the door, with a pale cheek and his eyes still on her, for he was an arrant coward. "You deserve to go to prison with him, you jade! I will have you in the stocks for this!"

She leaned against the wall where she had fallen, her white, despairing face seeming almost to shine in the darkness of the wretched room. Meanwhile the continuous murmur of men's voices outside could now be heard, mingled with the ring of weapons, and the summons for admission was again and again repeated, as if those without had no mind to be kept waiting.

"Patience, patience! I am opening!" he cried. Still keeping his face to her, he unlocked the door and called on the men to enter. "He is in the straw, M. le Mayor!" he cried in a tone of triumph, his eyes still on his wife. "He will give you no trouble, I will answer for it! But first give me my 5 crowns, mayor. My 5 crowns!"

He still felt so much fear of his wife that he did not turn to see the men enter and was taken by surprise when a voice at his elbow—a strange voice—said: "Five crowns, my friend? For what, may I ask?"

In his eagerness and excitement he suspected nothing, but thought only that the mayor had sent a deputy. "For what? For the Girondin!" he answered rapidly. Then at last he turned and found that half a dozen men had entered, and that more were entering. To his astonishment, they were all strangers to him—men with stern, gloomy faces and armed to the teeth. There was something so formidable in their appearance that his voice faltered as he added: "But where is the mayor, gentlemen? I do not see him."

No one answered, but in silence the last of the men—there were 11 in all—entered and bolted the door behind him. Michel Tellier peered at them in the gloom with growing alarm. In return the tallest of the strangers, who had entered first and seemed to be in command, looked round keenly. At length this man spoke. "So you have a Girondin here, have you?" he said, his voice curiously sweet and sonorous.

"I was to have 5 crowns for him," Michel muttered dubiously.

"Oh, Petion," continued the spokesman to one of his companions, "can you kindle a light? It strikes me that we have hit upon a dark place."

The man addressed took something from his pouch. For a moment there was silence, broken only by the sharp sound of the flint striking the steel. Then a sudden glare lit up the dark interior and disclosed the group of cloaked strangers standing about the door, the light gleaming back from their muskets and cutlasses. Michel trembled. He had never seen such men as these before. True, they were wet and travel stained and had the air of those who spend their nights in ditches and under haystacks. But their pale, stern faces were set in indomitable resolve. Their eyes glowed with a steady fire, and they trod as kings tread. Their leader was a man of majestic height and beauty, and in his eyes alone there seemed to lurk a spark of some lighter fire, as if his spirit still rose above the task which had sobered his companions. Michel noted all this in fear and bewilderment; noted the white head and yet vigorous bearing of the man who had struck the light; noted even the manner in which the light died away in the dim recesses of the barn.

"And this Girondin—is he in hiding here?" said the tall man.

"That is so," Michel answered. "But I had nothing to do with hiding him, citizen. It was my wife hid him in the straw there."

"And you gave notice of his presence to the authorities?" continued the stranger, raising his hand to repress some movement among his followers.

"Certainly, or you would not have been here," replied Michel, better satisfied with himself.

The answer struck him down with an awful terror. "That does not follow," said the tall man coolly, "for we are Girondins!"

"You are?"

"Without doubt," the other answered, with majestic simplicity, "or there are no such persons. This is Petion and this Citizen Buzot. Have you heard of Louvet? There he stands. For me, I am Barbaroux."

Michel's tongue seemed glued to the roof of his mouth. He could not utter a word. But another could. On the far side of the barrier a sudden rustling was heard, and while all turned to look—but with what different feelings!—the pale face of the youth over whom Michel had bent in the afternoon appeared above the partition. A smile of joyful recognition effaced for the time the lines of exhaustion. The young man, clinging for support to the planks, uttered a cry of thankfulness. "It is you! It is really you! You are safe!" he exclaimed.

"We are safe, all of us, Pierre," Barbaroux answered. "And now"—and he turned to Michel Tellier with sudden "this man whom [illegible] are betrayed is our guide, [illegible]u, whom we lost last night. [illegible] in your defense, if you can. [illegible] you have to say why justice shall not be done upon you, miserable caitiff, who would have sold a man's life for a few pieces of silver!"

The wretched peasant's knees trembled, and the perspiration stood upon his brow. He heard the voice as the voice of a judge. He looked in the stern eyes of the Girondins and read only anger and vengeance. Then he caught in the silence the sound of his wife weeping, for at Pierre's appearance she had broken into wild sobbing, and he spoke out of the base instincts of his heart. "He was her lover," he muttered. "I swear it, citizens."

"He lies!" cried the man at the barrier, his face transfigured with rage. "I loved her, it is true, but it was before her old father sold her to this Judas. For what he would have you believe now, my friends, it is false. I, too, swear it."

A murmur of execration broke from the group of Girondins. Barbaroux repressed it by a gesture. "What do you say of this man?" he asked, turning to them, his voice deep and solemn.

"He is not fit to live!" they answered in chorus.

The poor coward screamed as he heard the words, and flinging himself on the ground he embraced Barbaroux's knees in a paroxysm of terror. But the judge did not look at him. Barbaroux turned instead to Pierre Bonnat. "What do you say of him?" he asked.

"He is not fit to live," said the young man solemnly, his breath coming quick and fast.

"And you?" Barbaroux continued, turning and looking with his eyes of fire at the wife, his voice gentle and yet more solemn.

A moment before she had ceased to weep and had stood up listening and gazing, awe and wonder in her face. Barbaroux had to repeat his question before she answered. Then she said, "He is not fit to die."

There was silence for a moment, broken only by the entreaties of the wretch on the floor. At last Barbaroux spoke. "She has said rightly," he pronounced. "He shall live. They have put us out of the law and set a price on our heads, but we will keep the law. He shall live. But, hark you," the great orator continued in tones which Michel never forgot, "if a whisper escape you as to our presence here, or our names, or if you wrong your wife by word or deed, the life she has saved shall pay for it.

"Remember!" he added, shaking Michel to and fro with a finger. "The arm of Barbaroux is long, and though I be 100 leagues away I shall know, and I shall punish. So beware! Now, rise and live!"

The miserable man cowered back to the wall, frightened to the core of his heart. The Girondins conferred awhile in whispers, two of their number assisting Pierre to cross the barrier. Suddenly there came—and Michel trembled anew as he heard it—a loud knocking at the door. All started and stood listening and waiting. A voice outside cried, "Open, open in the name of the law!"

"We have lingered too long," Barbaroux muttered. "I should have thought of this. It is the mayor of Carbaix come to apprehend our friend."

Again the Girondins conferred together. At last, seeming to arrive at a conclusion, they ranged themselves on either side of the door, and one of their number opened it. A short, stout man, girt with a tricolor sash and wearing a huge sword, entered with an air of authority. Being blinded by the light, he saw nothing out of the common and was followed by four men armed with muskets.

Their appearance produced an extraordinary effect on Michel Tellier. As they one by one crossed the threshold the peasant leaned forward, his face flushed, his eyes gleaming, and counted them. They were only five. And the others were 12. He fell back, and from that moment his belief in the Girondins' power was clinched.

"In the name of the law!" panted the mayor. "Why did you not"— Then he stopped abruptly, his mouth remaining open. He found himself surrounded by a group of grim, silent mutes, with arms in their hands, and in a twinkling it flashed into his mind that these were the 11 chiefs of the Girondins whom he had been warned to keep watch for. He had come to catch a pigeon and had caught a crow. He turned pale, and his eyes dropped. "Who are—who are these gentlemen?" he stammered in a ludicrously altered tone.

"Some volunteers of Quumpen, returning home," replied Barbaroux, with ironical smoothness.

"You have your papers, citizens?" the mayor asked mechanically, and he took a step back toward the door and looked over his shoulder.

"Here they are!" said Petion rudely, thrusting a packet into his hands. "They are in order."

The mayor took them, and longing only to see the outside of the door pretended to look through them, his little heart going pit-a-pat within him. "They seem to be in order," he assented feebly. "I need not trouble you further, citizens. I came here under a misapprehension, I find, and I wish you a good journey."

He knew, as he backed out, that he was cutting a poor figure. He would fain have made a more dignified retreat. But before these men, fugitives and outlaws as they were, he felt, though he was mayor of Carbaix, almost as small a man as did Michel Tellier. These were the men of the revolution. They had bearded nobles and pulled down kings. There was Barbaroux, who had grappled with Marat, and Petion, the mayor of the Bastille. The little mayor of Carbaix knew greatness when he saw it. He turned tail and hurried back to his fireside, his bodyguard not a whit behind him.

Five minutes later the men he feared and envied came out also and went their way, passing in single file into the darkness which brooded over the great monolith, beginning, brave hearts, another of the few stages which still lay between them and the guillotine. Then in the cottage there remained only Michel and Jeanne. She sat by the dying embers, silent and lost in thought. He leaned against the wall, his eyes roving ceaselessly, but always when his gaze met hers it fell. Barbaroux had conquered him. It was not u[illegible] had risen to close the door [illegible] alone that he wrung his ha[illegible]tered: "Five crowns! Five [illegible] and wasted!"

Coyotes and Antelopes.

George Bird Grinnell tells, in Forest and Stream, how the coyotes hunt and kill antelopes.

"I went one morning," he says, "to get the horses for the camp. They were nowhere to be seen, so I climbed a hill from which I expected to see them. Just before I got to the top an old doe antelope came into view, closely followed by a coyote. Both seemed to be going as hard as they could, having their tongues out as if they had come a long way. Suddenly another coyote appeared close to the antelope's heels, taking up the chase, while the first coyote left off following, while the first to watch. The antelope ran a long way, always bearing to the left, showing that she was circling like a dogged rabbit, and would most likely come close to the hill after a time. The wolf I had first seen trotted off 200 or 300 yards and sat down on the prairie again, almost in the line of the antelope's run.

"As the antelope approached, the sitting coyote crouched close to the ground, raising its head slowly now and then, crawling along on its belly a little as if to get directly in the antelope's path. As the antelope drew near the crouching coyote I saw that she was staggering tired. When she reached the concealed coyote, the wolf leaped at her throat, and down the two went. The wolf that had taken up the chase had been joined by another, and those two mixed in with the antelope and first coyote. When the waving tails and stretching legs had straightened out and were quieted down, the three coyotes were seen eating their breakfast."

PROOF OF SINCERITY.

How An Army Officer Stood the Supreme Test of Belief In Fatalism.

In the days of the "old army" on the frontier, when military posts were sometimes hundreds of miles from any civilized place, there was little to do in the way of amusement in the winter time when the post was snowbound, and it was then that the reputation the army has for card playing and drinking was gained. And it is true that a great deal of both was done at that time.

It was in these days that an event transpired that showed that the principal actor had the courage of his convictions, and that he was most certainly born under a lucky star. It was after a very "wet" stag dinner party, and all had partaken most freely of the wine, and, strange as it may seem, the subject that came up for discussion was the Mohammedan religion. The Mussulmans believe in fate. To them a man's fate is written above, and the time of his death is set, and nothing can advance it. Well, this belief had been discussed long and earnestly. The pros and cons had been gone over at length, till one officer wanted to know of what use was reason if every one was born with a tag of destiny attached. One officer finally arose and said there was no use of discussing the matter any further. The only way was to make a practical test of the question, and he would give himself as a subject. Could a man willfully dispose of his life when the fatal moment had been chosen at his birth from above?

He could get no one to try the experiment on him. Finally a wager was made.

"Who will pay you if I lose?" said the subject as he drew his pistol and showed that it was loaded. He placed the pistol against his temple and pulled the trigger. The pistol missed fire.

"A joke," yelled the crowd.

The fatalist smiled, and, recocking the pistol, aimed it with a steady hand at the clock on the wall. He fired, and the bullet crashed through the center of the dial.

"Apologize to me now," he said. "I have won the bet. I always believed in fate."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

FISH AS FOOD.

The Dark Is Better Than the White For an Active Person.

Mrs. S. T. Rorer, in The Ladies' Home Journal, contends that there has not been a sufficiently accurate analysis upon which to base any table regarding the chemical composition of fish at all reliable. "The albuminoid matter in white fish, as cod, haddock and halibut, is in about the same proportion as in beef and mutton. They contain, however, more phosphorus—the active fish, such as trout and pickerel, containing a still greater amount, due no doubt to their activity. The amount of carbon depends largely upon the amount of fat they contain. The whitefish are, therefore, deficient in carbon. If you should ask an intelligent cook what vegetable to serve with a boiled white fish she would answer quickly, potatoes, as they supply the wanting carbohydrates.

"There are other kinds of fish, however, such as salmon, catfish and sturgeon, that are quite well supplied with carbohydrates, in consequence of which they are not so easily digested as the white fish. The more oil they have dispersed through the body, the more difficult the digestion. In the white fish the fat is held in the liver; in the dark fish it is dispersed through the entire flesh. From this fact we learn that dark fish make a much better diet for the active man. Many authorities affirm that the more active fish, as well as the more active animals, give better muscle making food than their more indolent relations."

Where the Trouble Was.

"Brother," said the minister, "you should try to be content with what you have."

"I am," said the brother, who had been grumbling. "It is what I ain't got that I am dissatisfied about."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Eczema All Her Life.

Mr. E. D. Jenkins, of Lithonia, Ga., says that his daughter, Ida, inherited a severe case of Eczema, which the usual mercury and potash remedies failed to relieve. Year by year she was treated with various medicines, external applications and internal remedies, without result. Her sufferings were intense, and her condition grew steadily worse. All the so-called blood remedies did not seem to reach the disease at all until S.S.S. was given, when an improvement was at once noticed. The medicine was continued with favorable results, and now she is cured sound and well, her skin is perfectly clear and pure and she has been saved from what threatened to blight her life forever.

S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) cures Eczema, Scrofula, Cancer, Rheumatism, or any other blood trouble.

It is a real blood remedy and always cures even after all else fails.

Anecdote and Incident

Judge Roy Bean, of Langtry, Texas, was once trying a Mexican for stealing a horse, and his charge to the jury (as given in Leslie's Weekly) was one of the shortest on record: "Gentlemen of the jury, that's a greaser in the box, and a hoss missing; you know your duty!" And they did.

At a table d'hote dinner at a hill station in India, a very young officer just up from the plains found himself seated next to a lady whom he took for one of the grass widows common in those parts. He made himself agreeable, but his neighbor seemed a good deal out of spirits; so he said, sympathetically: "I suppose you can't help thinking of your poor husband grilling down below?" But the lady was a real widow, and when he learned that he changed his seat.

A certain clergyman would always wear a M. A.'s hood over his surplice. Some of his confreres objected to his doing so, as he was only a B. A. of one of the universities and had never taken his M. A. degree. One indignant and duly qualified parson (says Vogue) went and remonstrated with Archbishop Magee, and begged him to interfere in the matter, for, said he, "The man is simply wearing a lie." "Oh—no—not so bad as that," replied the archbishop; "only a falsehood!"

Justin Huntly McCarthy was once showing a young American woman over the houses of Parliament. In escorting her through the library of the Commons he casually mentioned, as a more or less interesting fact, that it was against the rules for a woman to sit down there. "Is that really a law of the place?" asked the fair American. "That is so," answered McCarthy, gravely. "Then," said his visitor, "you just see me break it," and, drawing up a chair, she sat resolutely down at the table.

When Washington Hesing, of Chicago, was devoting all his energies to the conduct of his paper, the Staats Zeitung, there was a big fire in Chicago which his paper failed to mention. "Why didn't we have a report of that fire last night?" he asked next morning of a fresh reporter who had been assigned to it. "My dear Mr. Hesing," replied the young journalist in surprise, "there was nothing new to print about it. Every one in Chicago was there and saw it." "Young man," said Mr. Hesing, "if any one asks you if you work for the Staats Zeitung, tell him no."

Thaddeus Stevens was once opposed in debate by Horace Maynard, of Tennessee. Maynard was very tall and straight, and had long black hair, which he wore well down over his coat-collar, and which gave him somewhat the appearance of an Indian. It was even rumored that he had some aboriginal blood in his veins. Maynard prided himself on his scholarly attainments, and at the close of his address he quoted one or two Latin verses. Old Thad replied to Maynard's argument in his usual vigorous manner, and then paused for a few seconds until he had secured the attention of the entire House. Turning to Maynard, who sat some distance behind him, he delivered this parting shot: "So much for the gentleman's English. As to his Choctaw, I do not profess to understand it."

Sheridan once had occasion to call at a hairdresser's to order a wig. On being measured, the barber, who was a liberal soul, invited the orator to take some refreshment in an inner room. Here he regaled him with a bottle of port and showed so much hospitality that Sheridan's heart was touched. When they rose from the table and were about separating, the latter, looking the barber full in the face ,said: "On reflecting, I don't intend that you shall make my wig." Astonished and with a blank visage, the other exclaimed: "Good heavens, Mr. Sheridan! How can I have displeased you?" "Why, look you," said Sheridan, "you are an honest fellow, and, I repeat it, you sha'n't make my wig, for I never intended to pay for it. I'll go to another less worthy son of the craft."

Once Was Enough.

"Like a good many young men who have more imagination than experience, I started out to be a detective."

The speaker was a man who buys real estate when some one has to sell, and sells when some one is anxious to buy.

"By sheer chance I happened to be on the ground when a new agency was being formed and found employment. There was a reign of terror then because of burglaries and hold-ups, just as there now is in many cities. On a certain evening one of the wealthiest men in the country was robbed by footpads and I was put on the case. I found his watch in a pawn shop and watched patiently there till the thief appeared with a gold match safe set with diamonds.

"Bent on doing the job alone, I shadowed him home with a view to getting the rest of the plunder and corral the rest of the offenders if there happened to be a gang. My man did not make a bluff, much less a fight. He gave up the pawn tickets, surrendered most of the money taken and declared himself my prisoner. As I was about to slip the cuffs on his wrists he asked me to step for a minute into the next room. There was a woman that looked about as substantial as a ghost, and three little children in rags, crying for something to eat. Not a word was said, and when we were back in the main room the man extended his hands for the wristlets. I took his right hand, gave it a hearty shake and told him to provide in some honest way for those in the other room.

"On the way back to the agency I was stopped by a revolver near the end of my nose and the money I had captured was taken away from me. The robber was the man I had just spared, and he grinned as he told me that I happened to drop in on him while he had his gun apart cleaning it. He was just stopping there temporarily, and had nothing to do with those who had so stirred my pity.

"I mailed my resignation to headquarters and left for another city."

An Untold Story.

She is a maiden aunt who has ceased to hide her spectacles when a gentleman calls, and likes to knit rather than be idle.

"Of course, there's a romance in your life, auntie," declared her dashing niece the other day. "There's a romance in every woman's life. Now be good and tell me yours."

"It's nothing." And the kindly face blushed almost into youthfulness. "There was a very attractive young man with whom I had grown up. We had been thrown together a great deal, and before he started abroad to pursue his studies as an artist he came to spend the evening with me and take leave. I recall that we talked of everything that offered an excuse for talking, until he rose to go.

"Then he took me by the hand. He faltered, turning red and then turning white. It seemed he could not speak then, and he took a nervous turn about the room. As he came back to me there was a steadier and more determined look in his grave blue eyes. Again he took my trembling hand in his strong grasp and pronounced my name——"

"Yes, auntie."

"Here father and your uncle entered unceremoniously, discussing some earthy matter of business. Man-like, they spread themselves out in front of the grate, talked to Hugh about his trip and remained there till he was gone."

"O, the horrid brutes!"

"Thank you, dear. Now you can share the curiosity I have indulged so many years. If he had spoken, what would he have said?"

The Finest Coach.

There is no accounting for taste, and when a man is going to make a purchase he has a right to please himself, let the result be as odd as it may. There is a story told in connection with the opening of the Nez Perce Indian reservation, in which the result of a purchase was odd enough, but the purchaser was unfeignedly happy in his strange possession.

When the Indians of the reservation had received their money from the Government, they went to the neighboring towns to spend it. Their visit having been anticipated, sellers were prepared to part with anything and everything that might take an Indian's fancy. It chanced that the red men coveted buggies, carts and wagons, and soon all the available conveyances in the little town of Farmington were in their possession.

But though the buggies were all gone, the Indians were not all satisfied. One old Indian had set his heart on the possession of a vehicle, and there was no vehicle to be had. The case looked hopeless, but the Indian was persevering. He was not to be outdone by his fellow-braves, and he started on a diligent search, visiting every place where buggies were to be sold, but always meeting with the same answer—there was not one left.

At last, however, perseverance was rewarded, and the seeker heard of a conveyance that—if the reality came anywhere near the description—was so much better than a buggy that it could not fail to awaken the envy of every purchaser of a common carriage, and once and forever establish its own superiority; so he hied him to the owner of the vehicle, who turned out to be the town undertaker, and made known his desire to secure it.

It did not take the undertaker long to discover that the Indian was asking for his hearse, and with an eye to business he decided to part with it for a good round sum. Money being just now no consideration to the red man, the somber carriage changed hands, and the lucky purchaser's two horses were speedily attached to the same.

Then, with an indescribable air of proud complacency, the Indian marshaled squaw and papooses into the new carriage, took his own place on the high seat, and started off for home, driving haughtily past his fellow red men, who lined the road to watch the progress of this the greatest purchase of the day, while the small, tawny faces of the Indian's progeny were pressed against the glass sides of the coach in eager appreciation of the sensation the family was causing.

Planting Early Potatoes.

The earliest planting of potatoes ought always to be much shallower than late in the season. If the seed is planted deep, with the freshly cut pieces in contact with wet and cold soil, the potato will rot instead of growing. This can be prevened by cutting the seed a number of days before planting, and leaving the cut pieces in a place where they will dry out rapidly, and also be warm. Under such conditions the buds will start slowly and be of dark-green color if the cut pieces are exposed to light, as they always should be. The more thoroughly the pieces are dried out, the better it will be for early planting, provided the buds have not started so far as to begin to wither from lack of support. In the damp soil the cut potato absorbs some of the moisture. This not only dries the soil around it, but increases its warmth also, for as the water is dried from the soil the surface air, which in spring is always warmer than the soil, comes in to take its place. If potato seed for early planting is managed in this way, the seed will not rot in the soil. Besides, the crop will be two weeks earlier than from unprepared seed.—American Cultivator.

Sub-Irrigation.

Sub-irrigation by means of lines of tile is too expensive. I find the cheapest way to sub-irrigate is by using ditches filled with clean gravel with coarse stone on top of the gravel. These ditches are made with a mold ditcher constructed for the purpose. A double hopper is attached to the ditcher and kept full of gravel and sand, which fills the ditches as the machine advances. The ditches should have about three inches of fall to the 100 feet. At the upper end of the gravel ditch place a six-inch tile and keep it full of water during the dry time. Also place a line of tile at the lower end of the ditch to act as a drain during wet weather. Place the gravel ditches about six or twelve feet apart and about two feet deep. On a small scale for gardening this plan will work very well.—J. B. Hill, in Orange Judd Farmer.

SUB-IRRIGATION WITHOUT TILE.

Girdling Fruit Trees.

There is a common opinion that girdling, or the removal of a small ring of bark from a limb or the body of the tree, will induce fruiting the coming season, as the sap coming back from the blossom is retarded and blossom buds are formed for the next season. The common practice is to remove a ring of the bark. Mr. Dart, however, adivses removing a spiral and finds that this gives better satisfaction from the fact that there is less danger of injuring the tree. To make a barren tree bloom, girdling should be done the last of July or the first week in August. About the only excuse for this practice is when it is desired to induce early fruiting, so as to learn the value of a variety as soon as possible. Cut out one-fourth inch of bark around some branch that will be removed anyhow in pruning. This has been practiced by experimenters, but it invariably results in causing a dead spot difficult to heal over when the branch is finally removed. It is generally agreed that the spiral system of grinding is the most satisfactory.

Substantial Farm Gate.

The illustration shows a farm gate that cannot sag, cannot "leave its moorings," and gives, moreover, a substantial and finished air to the surroundings. It is useless to make a gate that will not sag, and then hang it to supports that soon bend under the weight pulling upon them, or lose their footing and slide out of place. The gate and gateway here figured are braced from every point, as can be seen, and so must always remain firmly in position. It takes more time and lumber to build such a gate, but it is time and lumber profitably spent.—Farm and Home.

GATE THAT CANNOT SAG.

Care of Sitting Hens.

All the necessity for care is not ended when the hen is duly installed in her three weeks' task, and is sitting faithfully. The Asiatic breeds of fowls, including such crosses as the Plymouth Rock, are so persistent in sitting that unless the poulterer tempts them off to eat they may addle the eggs by too much warmth and exclusion of the air. The egg is porous, and the young chick must get all the air it requires through the shell. As hatching time approaches, there is less danger of addling the eggs by cold, even if the hen is off some time. The warmth from the chick will keep the egg from getting cold, anyway. Sprinkling the eggs with tepid water is useful where the sitting is too persistent.

Salt to Hasten Decomposition.

It is only when used in large amounts as a pickle that salt retards decay. Used in small amounts on either animal or vegetable matter, with enough water to dissolve it, salt will always hasten decomposition. For this reason it is an excellent plan to use it wherever it is desired to have manures act more quickly. A little sprinkled over a manure heap with water enough to wash it down will set it to fermenting. It will do the same when a tough sod has been plowed under which it is necessary to rot quickly.

Poultry House Rake.

The poultry quarters should have four or five inches of loam or road dust on the floor for the fowls to scratch in and dust themselves in, but this soon becomes covered with feathers and masses of droppings. A fine-toothed rake is serviceable in raking over the pens, thus collecting all feathers, etc., when they can be put into barrels with the dressing. An ordinary rake, and even a garden rake are too coarse for this purpose. The sketch shows a good homemade rake that answers well for this work. Wire nails, driven very close together, form the teeth. A strip of hard wood should be used for the head, while an old hayrake handle can be pressed into service for the handle.—American Agriculturist.

POULTRY HOUSE RAKE.

Pruning Currant Bushes.

It is very hard to keep currant bushes thrifty and productive when anywhere from six to ten or a dozen sprouts are allowed to grow in each hill. These conditions are just right for the currant worm to do a good deal of injury before he can be found and killed with hellebore. We always cut out all but three or four shoots. Though many advise training the bushes in tree form, only one in a place, two, three or even four shoots will bear enough more to pay for the extra trouble.

A Year's Wood Ahead.

There is nothing more provoking than trying to cook with partially green wood. So much more wood has to be burned to overcome the waste in turning the moisture in green wood to steam that more heat is given out than is needed. It is the mark of a good farmer to have a year's wood cut and piled always in advance of its use. When this is once begun there is a real saving in labor, as less of the dry wood will be required.

Farm Notes.

Protect the lambs against being drenched by sudden showers.

Good money can be made in raising sheep for mutton as well as for wool. Quality counts.

Grease or oil on sitting hens is positively injurious, either on the hen's feathers or body, as the least trace upon the eggs destroys the germs.

In growing ensilage corn do not use more than twelve quarts of seed to the acre, in drills three feet apart. Let it stand until it begins to glaze some. It is no trouble to get fifteen tons of ensilage to the acre. The idea that good ensilage will in any way taint or injure milk is ridiculous. An expert cannot detect ensilage-made milk if the ensilage is all right.

Do you receive the bulletins of your State experiment station? By applying to it on a postal for them these useful reports will be mailed you free. And the station is usually glad to answer your questions on any points upon which you need help in your agricultural work. That's one of the things the station is for. Its officers are liberally paid to serve the farmers' interests. It is your own fault if you don't make use of it.

Successful management of the calf lies at the foundation of stock-raising, and there must be no slack in attention or watchfulness. Scouring, the bane o fcalf rearing, indicates indigestion, and results from overfeeding, irregular feeding, giving food too cold, or permitting the young animal to get chilled or wet.

What Hobart Sacrificed.

The official salary of Vice President Hobart is $10,500. Mr. Hobart, upon taking office, resigned positions and connections paying him five times the amount of this salary, and he assumed social functions that will increase his expenses about ten times. In a pecuniary way the election has been a heavy loss to him.

THE FALL OF MALAXA, CRETE—INSURGENTS CARRYING THE BLOCKHOUSE BY STORM.

ONE of the most interesting scenes in the Cretan war, now being waged with thrilling interest, was the fight for the blockhouse of Malaxa, and which was followed by the bombardment by the great powers. This blockhouse stood upon a hill overlooking Suda Bay, with its arsenal and its dock yards. For weeks the insurgents had tried to capture it from the Turks, but had failed. On the day mentioned, however, the Cretans succeeded. They had managed to get hold of a small field piece and had burrowed a hole in the sides of the stout building. All day long they kept up a continuous fire in spite of the Turkish warships, which persistently tried to shell their position. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the Cretans made a rush upon the position and surrounded the blockhouse with about 300 of their men. Sharp conflict followed and the Turks fought gallantly. Fierce firing was exchanged, and it is said that it was not until at least forty of the Turks were slain that the Cretans got control of the place. The Cretans, fired with conquest and patriotism, killed all of the enemy that resisted, excepting two, who happily made their escape. The Cretans had been previously warned not to attack this position of the Turks, and the admirals in the Bay of Suda, seeing their orders set at naught, began to shell the position of the insurgents. The Italian battle ship Sicilia gave the signal and opened fire on the Cretans. The other war ships followed, and later the British ships in port took part in the bombardment. This concerted action of course put an end to the attack.

A SECOND HELEN KELLAR.

Marvelous Education of a Girl Who Is Deaf, Dumb and Blind.

Linnie Haguewood, a 17-year-old pupil of the South Dakota School for the Deaf and Dumb, is the Helen Kellar of the West and promises to develop the marvelous capacities for seeing, hearing and speaking while deaf, dumb and blind exhibited by the wonderful girl now a student at Harvard "Annex." Miss Haguewood is 17 years old and her story is almost a precise repetition of that of Helen Kellar. The Eastern girl, however, has had a great advantage over her Western sister in that her education began at a much earlier age and her teacher was more adept than Miss Haguewood's instructor.

Linnie was born at Ida Grove, Iowa, and, like Helen, was a perfectly normal child up to her 18th month. At that time she was stricken with a spinal disease and when she recovered it was found that she had lost the senses of sight and hearing totally. She lived in a world without sound and practically never having heard the human voice she was unable to speak, notwithstanding that the muscles and nerves used in articulating were in nowise injured. But Linnie's parents, unlike those of Miss Kellar, were not rich, and were unable to engage special teachers for her. Indeed, they did not know that their child could be rescued from the awful solitude in which she lived until she was nearly 14 years old.

Until she was 14 years old Miss Haguewood was cared for like an infant. She was unable to walk and could not communicate a single thought to any human being. At 14 she was placed in an asylum for the blind at Vinton, Iowa, and there Miss Dora Donald, one of the teachers, became deeply interested in the girl. A subscription was opened for the purpose of educating Linnie, the Iowa Legislature appropriated $500, and Miss Donald at once devoted all her time to her. For three years she had instructed the helpless girl and recently brought her to the Deaf and Dumb Institution at Sioux Falls. The methods she has followed are those employed by Miss Sullivan in teaching Helen Kellar. She is now teaching her how to talk. Linnie places her delicately sensitive fingers on the mouth of her teacher. Miss Donald then enunciates a sound and the pupil endeavors to imitate it. One sound is repeated hundreds of times until it approaches perfection, and then another is tried. The various sounds are then combined, and the result is articulate speech. Miss Donald readily understands what her charge says, but others cannot.

LINNIE HAGUEWOOD.

Miss Haguewood is able to cut and sew her own garments, to write letters on a typewriter, to read readily her Sunday school paper and her Bible and to write slowly on the tablets which are provided for the blind. By her delicate sense of touch she is able to recognize her friends, and even to remember on second meeting those whom she has noticed before. She is able to recognize at the first touch those whom she knows well. She is passionately fond of flowers, of dress and jewelry. It was only until recently that Linnie began to realize that she differed in any respect from the ordinary human being.

CHICAGO'S MAYOR'S WIFE.

Mrs. Carter Harrison Was a Louisiana Belle.

One of the most talked about young men in the country to-day is Carter H. Harrison, who was elected Mayor of Chicago by a phenomenal majority. Naturally his wife and family are also coming in for a large share of attention.

Mrs. Harrison is a charming woman of the Southern type of beauty. She was Miss Edith Ogden, daughter of Judge Robert N. Ogden of the United States Court of Appeals in Louisiana. Her parental home is at New Orleans, and she usually spends her winters in the South. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison first met at the old Harrison home in Chicago, where, during a visit to her Chicago cousins, she attended a reception. In December, 1887, they were married at the home of Judge Ogden in New Orleans. They have two children—Carter H., the third (the seventh of that name in the family), now 7 years old. The other is a bright little daughter, Edith Ogden, 15 months old. Mrs. Harrison was educated in the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy in her native city, and is a Catholic in religious belief.

MRS. CARTER H. HARRISON.

The Harrisons, owing to travels, etc., have not entered much into Chicago society during the last two or three years. Mrs. Harrison has studied French and German under private tutors and is an accomplished conversationalist.

Chinese Ideal of Beauty.

The ideal of beauty among the Chinese differs as widely from ours as do their written characters from our A B C. Not long since a member of the Chinese legation was looking at a photographic group of decidedly pretty young English ladies, and, being being asked whether he admired them, replied, "No, they are difficult to look at, difficult to look at." As to figure, a willow-like waist and a bending yielding form are the objects of highest admiration in China, and so a character formed of parts signifying "a woman" and "curved" is used to denote beautiful, lovely, comely. Many meanings connected with women are allied with characters which prima facie bear no relation to them.

The Modern Shark.

The modern shark is deteriorating. In ages gone by there were ferocious sharks, such as would make a mouthful of you without blinking, 70 feet in length. Plenty of their teeth have been found which are five inches long, whereas the biggest of the teeth belonging to sharks that exist at the present day are one and a half inches long.

MONUMENT TO VON MOLTKE.

Memorial to the Great German Marshal to Be Erected at Breslau.

A pretty monument to Von Moltke, the famous German marshal, is soon to be erected at Breslau. The design has already been selected. "Old Forwards" is seen in a single figure standing erect upon a pedestal and holding a map of war. At the base of the pedestal is an equestrian group showing a figure of Victory with winged head, tendering the general a laurel crown. Near by are standards, ordnance and other symbols of war. Von Moltke has been dead just six years. Germany is rather prompt in erecting monuments to its heroes, and the wonder is that the gallant field marshal has not been publicly honored in this way before this time. Just before his death Van Moltke was the recipient of signal honors by the German people. It was in 1890, on the ninetieth anniversary of his birth. Berlin took a holiday and celebrated the birth of the hero of the French campaign with great pomp and glory. The field marshal had been a member of the Prussian army since 1822. The statue at Breslau is said to be a splendid portrait in face and figure of the old soldier.

MONUMENT TO VON MOLTKE.

A Phosphorescent Lake.

This peculiar phenomenon may be seen at New Providence, near Nassau, in the Bahamas. It is an artificial lake, having originally been constructed as a place in which to store green turtles and fish. It is about 1,000 feet long and from 200 feet to 300 feet wide. In the daytime it looks the same as any other small lake, but at night, which is the proper time for visiting it, the least disturbance of the water causes it to emit phosphorescent light. When agitated the whole lake looks like a sea of fire. Rowing boats are for hire to visitors, and as soon as the oars touch the water they seem to pass through gold. A young girl who lives with the keeper of the property can be induced, for a trifle, to plunge into the water and swim and splash about for the delight of her audience, when she appears enveloped in flame or struggling in a lake of burning oil.

As Done in Japan.

A Japanese auction is a most solemn affair. The buyers do not call out the bids, but write their names, together with the amounts they are willing to pay, on slips of paper, which they put into a box. These slips are looked through, and the articles awarded to the person who has made the biggest offer.

After a boy gets in a three-base hit he is never good for anything else.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR, ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JUNE 25 1897

A mining recorder in San Joaquin county has refused to surrender his books unless ordered to do so by the Superior Court. This will be a test case.

Charles D. Lane, the wealthy mine owner, is at Buckeye, Nev., where he will arrange plans for constructing an aqueduct from Alpine county to the famous Pine Nut mines, containing fabulous wealth. The cost of construction will aggregate a million dollars.

Trains will be running on the new railroad from Los Angeles to Johannesburg within ninety days. That is what Conductor Marsh says. He has returned to Los Angeles from Johannesburg, whither he went with Receiver Smith of the Atlantic & Pacific road to locate station buildings and attend to construction business.

The fact that no bonds have been issued by the McKinley administration is considered a matter worth mentioning by some of the organs. But none of them have yet thought of giving the credit to the Wilson bill, which seems to be producing sufficient revenue to run the government—all criticism to the contrary notwithstanding.

Los Angeles will have the biggest celebration of the Fourth of July this year in its history. Wm. J. Bryan will be there and will deliver the oration of the day. Seats have been arranged for 13,000 people at the grand stand, and there will be standing room for 15,000 more. A sounding board is being put up behind the speaker's stand that will be thirty feet wide and fourteen feet high. Everybody is on the qui vive, and the Silver Republican Club of that city is rapidly increasing its membership. Bryan is without doubt THE prominent citizen of the United States to-day.

Two corps of surveyors in the employ of the Southern Pacific Company are running a line through Walker's Pass, in the mountains north and east of Mojave, leading to Owens Lake. This is said to be the only unoccupied mountain pass through which a railroad could be built into this district from the north, and its possession will be contested by the Southern Pacific, Santa Fe and San Joaquin Valley roads. Each has surveyed through the pass, but neither has yet taken possession. Railroad men believe the present operations of the Southern Pacific engineers is only to keep out some formidable rival, but the fact that the surveying is being done at this season indicates some serious intentions.

The treaty for the annexation of Hawaii to the United States will be sent to the Senate soon after the return of the President unless the present plans are altered. The treaty has been written and all the details fully agreed upon before the President and Secretary Sherman left for the South. There is no doubt, it is said, of the President's acquiescence in the terms of the treaty, for the reason that he was made fully aware of them before he left. The treaty is on the general lines of that negotiated during the administration of President Harrison and withdrawn by President Cleveland. It provides for annexation without the exaction of conditions on the part of the Hawaiians as to the form of government to be vouchsafed to Hawaii, leaving that question to be entirely disposed of by the Government of the United States.

The United States will agree to assume the debt of the present Hawaiian Government, but will come into possession of all the Hawaiian crown lands and other possessions.

Japan has protested vigorously, but the American Government will take no notice, as the interests of the United States in Hawaii are greater than those of any other nation.

Temblor de la Tierra

An earthquake occurred at 12.13 p. m. last Sunday, being felt at Salinas, Gilroy, Santa Rosa, Monterey, San Francisco and other places. Salinas suffered severely, and from one end of the city to the other evidences of the far-reaching effects of the temblor could be seen. In buildings of solid stone or brick were great cracks through which the interior of the structures of which they were part could be seen. Buildings were wrenched from their foundations, and many of them laid low to the ground. Chimneys had fallen from their perches and there was not a whole pane of glass in the city. In the drugstores the bottles that had contained medicines lay about in broken pieces, and the fluids they had held dyed the shelves and the floors. The fine and costly plate-glass fronts in many of the stores were seamed with fissures.

Rev. Robert Ritchie, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Oakland, was drawing a terrible picture of the wickedness of the world and how it was going to the bow-wows, when he saw a woman and two choir boys fall in a faint from the shock. He also turned pale and left the pulpit being too sick to continue.

Rev. A. Kummer of Oakland was preaching on the "General Judgment" when the shake came. He had pictured the terrible scene, the lightning, thunder, falling stones, etc., when the church began to tremble and three women fainted.

Independence did not feel the shocks.

The harbor of Acapulco, Mexico, was altered in shape by the quake.

Tehuantepec, a city in Mexico (population 15,000) was destroyed, not a building remaining standing.

At Assam, in India, 6000 lives were lost by earthquakes last week, and railroads, public buildings and other structures have been swept from the earth.

AN OPINION ON NEW MINING LAWS.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 20, 1897.

Sir—The enclosed correspondence appearing to have value as news in all the mining counties of California, we take pleasure in forwarding the same to you for the benefit of the many readers of your journal. The correspondence indicates clearly that the effect of the Act of March 27, 1897, is not clearly understood by some, and the questions propounded are such as naturally must suggest themselves to many of your readers who are directly concerned in having them answered.

The gentleman to whom we referred the letter of inquiry, J. F. Cowdery, attorney-at-law of this city, has such an intimate knowledge of the laws of California, and is so widely known as the editor of "Cowdery's Forms and Precedents," and the editor of the most correct publication of legal blank forms on the Pacific Coast, that his opinion will, we think, be received with general interest. Mr. Cowdery, it will be observed, is of the opinion that the Act of March 27, 1897, means that "the miners of a district have no right to require a notice to be recorded at any place other than the County Recorder's office, nor by any other person than the County Recorder." This is a matter of such personal concern to miners, mining recorders and all persons interested in mining in California, that it appears to be advisable to give it the greatest possible publicity.

A. CARLISLE & Co.

BODIE, June 3, 1897.

Carlisle & Co.:

Gentlemen—What does Mr. Cowdery think about the right of the Legislature abolishing the office of "Mining Recorder and transmitting records to County Recorder?" Under Sec. 2324, Revised Statutes U. S., privilege is granted and always recognized that miners have the right of electing a Recorder and recording their claims in the district, which law has been in force and recognized in Bodie mining district upwards of 25 years.

Also, can the Legislature legislate an officer out of office for the term for which he was elected? Mining Recorders are generally elected for one year from January 1st to January 1st succeeding. The records and seal are purchased by the Mining Recorder and have always been considered the property of the mining district. The last mining law also fails to provide a penalty for failure to transmit mining records to County Recorder.

The general opinion of mine owners and miners here is that the above part of the law is clearly unconstitutional.

X.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 7, 1897.

Carlisle & Co.:

Gentlemen—Answering the letter of inquiry directed to you, I say that, notwithstanding the Act of March 27, 1897, I think the miners of a district have a right to meet and adopt rules and regulations not in conflict with the State law and the laws of the United States. They may add to the State law a rule that notice of location shall state whether the lines of the location are parallel to or about upon a claim already located; the character of the ledge, or in case of placers whether the claim is in a river, on a flat or on a sea-shore and the like.

As to the place where a notice is to be recorded, I think the miners of a district have no right to require a notice to be recorded at any other place than the County Recorder's office nor by any other person than the County Recorder; and this because the U. S. mining law permits the miners of a district to make laws not in conflict with the United States or with the laws of the State or territory where the mine is situated. The State, by the Acts of March 31, 1891, Statutes, page 219, and the Act of 1897, has directed the aforesaid notices to be recorded in the County Recorder's office, and that direction is final.

If I lived in a mining district I would advocate the holding miners' meetings and I would also advocate the passage of a resolution abolishing the office of District Recorder and requiring all locations to conform to the California law of March 27, 1897.

If this is not done a locator may—in contested cases—have trouble in proving his location or, if he applies for a United States patent for his mine, he may have trouble.

I think the Legislature had a right to anticipate that miners would do substantially as above indicated, and that district recorders would turn over their books of Record to the County Recorder.

Section 74 of our Penal Code provides that every person who . . . intrudes himself into a public office is guilty of a misdemeanor, and Section 76 says that "Every officer whose office is abolished by law who . . . withholds or detains from his successor the records . . . of his office . . . is guilty of a felony."

I am inclined to the opinion that the office of Recorder for a mining district was abolished by the Act of 1897 and that a Recorder under the old law will be liable if he refuses to obey the new.

NOTICE No. 309.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, Independence, Cal. May 5, 1897.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT R. C. Chambers, whose residence and post office address is Salt Lake City, Utah, by A. A. Neil, his Attorney in fact has made application for a United States Patent for the Senator Lode mining claim, situate in Union Mining District, Inyo County, California, consisting of 1,500 linear feet of the lode and surface ground 600 feet wide, being Lot No. 40 and described in the field notes and plat of the official survey on file in this office, with magnetic variation at 15 degrees 46 minutes east, as follows:

Commencing at the Southeast corner of the claim, from which corner, the corner to Sections 1, 2, 11 and 12, T. 12, S. R. 34 E. bears South 74 deg. ¼ W. 228.50 ch. distant, and running thence North 38 deg. E 22 72 ch. 1500 ft. to the Northeast corner, from which corner a block of granite marked X bears South 6 deg. ¾ E. 2 75 ch. distant, and running thence North 56 deg. ¼ W. 9.09 ch. 600 ft. to the Northwest corner, thence South 38 deg. W. 22 72 ch. 1,500 ft. to the Southwest corner; thence South 38 deg W. 22.72 ch. 1500 ft. to the Southwest corner; thence South 56 deg. ¼ E. 9 09 ch 600 ft. to the Southeast corner the place of beginning, containing an area of 20.58 acres, all of which is claimed and applied for. The lode line of the Senator runs from a stone mound on the Southerly endline of the claim North 38 deg. E 22.72 ch. 1500 ft. to a point on the northerly endline of the claim, marked old location monument on the official plat. The said mining claim being of record in the office of the Recorder of said County at Independence in Inyo County, California, in Volume F of Land, Water and Mining Claims at page 59. There are no near known locations.

I direct that this notice be published in the INYO INDEPENDENT, the newspaper published nearest the said mining claim, for the period of ten weeks.

On Sunday, June 27, religious services will be held as follows:

Independence, at 11 a. m.
Lone Pine.
George's Creek.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

Assessor Chalfant is in town this week.

Albert Lewis got in from Salt Wells Valley yesterday morning.

Robert O'Neal came down from Bishop on Wednesday and will return to-morrow.

Wm. Callaway pulled out for Ballarat last Monday with an eight-animal team loaded with supplies.

C. F. Fuller has gone to Coso, where he has a good prospect. He will put in the summer developing his claim.

Mrs. S. A. Densmore arrived home Wednesday evening from a visit to her son, L. Gill, at San Bernardino.

George Thorpe got back to Independence this week from a prospecting trip to Tule Canyon and the Bodie region.

Hicks called the turn on the weather all right. The unusual windstorm which prevailed for over a week ended on the 22d.

Mrs. H. Levy went to Big Pine on Tuesday's train, where she will spend a couple of weeks visiting with her brother, L. Josephs.

Master Eddie Eibeshutz arrived from San Francisco on Wednesday's train, and will spend the summer vacation at Independence.

Lester Shepherd arrived from San Francisco on last Thursday's stage. He has been at school there for several years and is home for the summer vacation.

Frank Revada was tried at Bridgeport last week for the murder of Leahy, about seven years ago. The defense set up that Revada did not fire the fatal shot, and he was acquitted.

The County Board of Education has been holding a meeting this week for the purpose of correcting the final examination papers of the various graduating classes in the county.

The Superior Court has been occupied all the week on a suit involving the title to the Wiblelt mine, in the Slate range. About a dozen lawyers and witnesses are here from the lower country.

Hundreds of thousands have been induced to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy by reading what it has done for others, and having tested its merits for themselves are to-day its warmest friends. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

An arrangement has been made by which a mail will leave Modock every Sunday for Tuber and Lail Canyons, in the Panamint range. Tom Fitzgerald has secured a contract from San Francisco parties who are operating in those camps. All persons who wish to send letters and other mail to those points should address the same "via Modock."

The oldest squaw in Inyo county died on Tuesday last in Independence. She was aged 105 years. According to Piute custom, her house and bric-a-brac was burned to preclude the possibility of her ghost haunting the spot, and her body was buried. She was a familiar figure about town, and was the mother of Squaw "Maggie." Doc Woolin says he was not the cause of her death. Maybe not.

Two rich strikes are reported this week in the Hirsch mine. One is a strike of about 18 inches of galena in the tunnel and the other about the same width of gold ore in the lower workings, which assays over $595 per ton. Neither strike has yet been opened up sufficiently to form an opinion as to the extent, but it is fully expected they will both prove of considerable value, particularly the strike of gold ore. This is in dark-colored iron quartz and appears to be very strong.

Some miscreant stole a saddle belonging to Jacob Vagt on Tuesday evening. Young Vagt rode his horse to town and tied him to a hitching rack near the store of L. Wood. About half-past 8 some unknown person removed the saddle from the horse and turned the animal loose, evidently with the idea that it would run away and give the impression that it had broken loose with the saddle on and that the saddle had got lost. A reward will be paid for the arrest and conviction of the thief.

Arrangements are being perfected to have a jolly good time here on the Fourth. The literary exercises are in the hands of a committee which is striving earnestly to get up something well worth listening to. The Reward boys have signified their intention to turn out in force, and the ball game will be hotly contested. The ball in the evening is certain to prove a highly enjoyable affair. Particular attention will be given to the children, and their amusement will be well looked after. Don't forget to bring your lunch baskets and join in the picnic in the grove. This will be one of the leading features of the occasion.

Ballarat Briefs

The weather in Ballarat has been unusually pleasant for the last week. A cool breeze has kept the temperature quite low. The correspondent of the Register evidently doesn't know where he's at when he talks about the climate of Ballarat. Taken all around, we have as good a climate as any other section of Inyo county—Bishop not excepted.

I. N. Inskeep of the Los Angeles Business College arrived here yesterday. He expects to purchase the Redlands Mill, situated seven miles south of Ballarat, and have it moved to the Stiles and Argus Mills camp.

J. E. Langford, superintendent of the South Fork Development Company, arrived from San Francisco on the 15th inst. He expects to put up a cyanide mill, and will commence work at once with a large force of men.

H. S. Meyers of Pleasant City has purchased a half interest in the Opportunity mine, located in Happy Canyon, about three miles from Ballarat. Mr. Myers will start for San Francisco in a few days, and on his return will set a large force of men developing the Meyers and Stone claims. Some of these mines assay very high. Mr. Meyers' recent purchase, the Opportunity, goes $3070 34 to the ton, according to the local assayer.

Charles Anthony of Darwin came to the camp on the 20th inst. bringing with him a large box of supplies contributed by the people of Darwin for the support of H. G. Chickering of old Panamint. Mr. Chickering has been through the valley of the shadow of death, and the citizens of Darwin in general and Mr. Anthony in particular deserve much credit for their timely assistance.

C. A. Weaver, senior member of the firm of Weaver & Porter Bros., had a stroke of ill luck since his arrival in Delano, Kern county. His hardware store, valued at $10,000, was totally destroyed by fire. The loss will be covered partly by insurance.

The buildings here are progressing nicely. The King building will be occupied by the hotel next week. Stotler & Co. expect to move into their new building in the course of ten days or a fortnight.

Sandy Woods, with his fourteen-mule team, came into camp yesterday and returned to Mojave to-day. There are nine large freight teams kept regularly employed carrying freight to and from Ballarat, and there is room for more; the supply is not equal to the demand.

L. F. J. Wrinkle of Keeler was in town last week, presumably looking after mining interests.

Mr. Stotler returned from a trip to San Francisco yesterday. He says the thermometer did not climb quite so high in the city by the sea as it does in our city.

Randsburg Mining Suit

Like many other valuable properties, the famous Rand mines have come to be the objects of litigation. A suit for partition and sale and for the appointment of a receiver pendente lite, was filed in the United States Circuit Court. The complainant is the Rand Mountain Mining Company, and the suit is brought against the Sunlight Gold Mining Company, Rose L. Burcham, C. A. Burcham, John Singleton, Patrick Reddy, J. C. Campbell and W. H. Metson.

All the parties to the suit are owners of the quartz and placer claims in the Rand mining district known respectively as the Olympus, Trilby, Singleton, Johannesburg and Desert View claims. The Rand Mountain Mining Company owns one-fourth of the whole property, and the remainder is owned in proportions varying from one-fourth to one-twelfth by the respondents. C. A. Burcham, Mrs. Rose Burcham and John Singleton owned one-half of the property, which was sold to Patrick Reddy for $100,000, so the complaint alleges, although the consideration was not accepted when tendered. Mr. Reddy in turn disposed of his right to the Sunlight Mining Company.

Mining Suit

The case of Mathiason et al. vs. Norveil et al has occupied the attention of the Superior Court all the week. The plaintiffs are P. B. Mathiason, Cyrus Wheeler and Henry Anderson, and are represented by P. W. Forbes Esq. and Ben H. Yandell Esq.; John D. Pope Esq. of Los Angeles, the senior counsel, not being present. Cyrus Wheeler and W. H. Adams Jr., witnesses for plaintiffs, are here. The defendants are Levi A. Norveil and John K. Skinner, represented by M. E. C. Monday Esq. of Del Valle & Monday, and E. H. Bentley Esq., both of Los Angeles. Levi A. Norveil, Wm. Norveil and Otto Leippert, witness for defendants, are here. The suit involves the title to what is known as the Wiblelt mine, in the Slate range.

Following are the unclaimed letters at Thebe postoffice: Thomas B. Scovil, Joaquin Billie (Indian).

Butler, the alleged Australian murderer, whose capture on the Swanhilda some months ago gave the San Francisco papers material for a month's sensation, was tried and convicted in Sydney last week. He will go hence at the end of a rope next month, just like any other common murderer.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. Va., and one of the most widely known men in the State, was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June, 1894, Evans, then salesman for the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size, and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Keiner to Dutard—Interest in Phœnix mine, Coso mining district; consideration $1.

The Keyes Mine.

J. C. Irwin made a trip to the Keyes mine this week. He says that Keyes has his engine and arastras completed, and expected to begin operations yesterday. There is about 250 tons of ore on the dump. A great deal of development work has been done in the mine, and the property is looking very well. Mr. Irwin did not go the Madden and Buckwalter mine, but states that he was informed by Keyes that these parties had out quite a lot of high-grade ore.

KEEP IN SHAPE.

From the largest cities down to the smallest towns this is the month for the beginning of out-door sports of all kinds, and also the beginning of the season when sprains, bruises, hurts and mishaps are as plentiful as huckleberries. Every Spring this is a common experience, and the common experience has settled down to this, that the best thing to do is to be provided with a supply of St. Jacobs Oil for emergencies of the kind as an especially sure cure for the worst sprain or the blackest bruise. Sportsmen, athletes, ball players and oarsmen have known this for many, many seasons, and reference to it is now only a reminder to get your supplies. Hard strains and over-work of the muscles will bring pains and aches and sportsmen know what's best and are never without the surest cure in the use of the great remedy.

A STORY OF VOORHEES.

The Tall Sycamore and His One Legged Boy In Blue.

During the war the late Senator Voorhees of Indiana was not an ardent supporter of the Federal programme of hostilities, and this fact strongly militated against him when the war was over and he was a candidate for re-election to congress. The cry of his political opponents was that he had not been right on the war question, and combating this allegation and placating the veteran element were two of his hardest tasks on the stump. About this time occurred an incident that he often related years later with a great deal of enjoyment.

One day when he was speaking in his own behalf he noticed that his most enthusiastic auditor was a one legged man clad in the familiar army blue. Whenever he made a telling point in his speech this one legged individual cheered, waved his hands and enthusiastically pounded on the floor of the hall with his crutch. Voorhees was naturally pleased, and pausing in his speech cordially invited "his friend, the battle scarred veteran," to honor him by taking a seat on the stage.

The one legged man stumped forward noisily and took a chair beside Voorhees, who continued his speech, winning, as before, the boisterous plaudits of his new found admirer.

A few minutes later Voorhees deftly worked around to the main issue of the campaign and paid his respects to the people who were criticising his war record. He warmed to his work with his celebrated eloquence, and whenever he paused for breath the one legged man fairly splintered the stage in his outbursts of crutch enthusiasm.

"They say," cried Voorhees, "that I was not right on the war and that I am not loyal to the veteran, but my friend in blue here—my friend who left a leg on the field of battle—knows better than that. He knows where I stood and where I stand today, fellow citizens. By the way, my friend," the Tall Sycamore continued, "in what battle did you lose your leg?"

"Battle!" cried the one legged man. "I didn't lose that leg in a battle. I lost it in a sawmill."

ROCKED ON THE CREST OF THE WAVES.

The landsman, tourist or commercial traveler, speedily begins, and not only begins, but continues, to feel the extreme of human misery during the transit across the tempestuous Atlantic. But if, with wise prescience, he has provided himself with a supply of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, his pangs are promptly mitigated and then cease ere the good ship again drops her anchor. This is worth knowing, and thousands of our yachtsman, summer voyagers, tourists and business men do know it.

Asbestos in Shoes.

It has lately been proposed to use thin sheets of waterproofed asbestos in place of the usual spongy material employed for the inner sole of shoes. Not only would dampness thus be excluded, but it is said the natural temperature of the foot would be better retained, because asbestos is a poor conductor of heat.

Bees' Brains.

The brain of the honey-bee has recently been studied by Dr. Kenyon, of Clark University, more thoroughly, it is said, than ever before. It is thought that the source of a bee's power to adapt itself intelligently to its surroundings has been discovered in certain peculiar objects in its brain, called the "mushroom bodies."

The Sleep of Butterflies.

The same observer has watched the sleep of butterflies, and thinks that some of them are rendered secure from their enemies at night by their peculiar colors and markings. Thus large red and brown butterflies, with silvery spots on the under side of their wings, which are conspicuous by day, can hardly be distinguished at night when sleeping on goldenrods and other flowers that form their favorite resorts. At such times their bright wing colors blend with the hues of the flowers, while the silvery spots "glisten like the dewdrops around them."

The Sources of Platinum.

Most of the world's supply of platinum comes from the southern part of the Ural Mountains in Russia. According to the report of the Russian ministry of finance, the increased demand for the metal in 1895 raised the price for the raw material to nearly $500 a pound, and yet only 9,700 pounds of it were produced during the year. In fact, the production fell off largely from that of the preceding year. Platinum is also found in California, in South America and in Borneo. It was first heard of in Europe in 1735, when Ulloa, a Spanish explorer, carried home specimens from Peru.

The Deepest of Wells.

Men of science are interested in all very deep borings in the earth on account of the opportunity which they offer for experiments on the internal temperature of the globe. Gas and oil wells sometimes attain a great depth, and after they have ceased to be useful in other ways are turned to scientific account. The very deepest hole that man has yet succeeded in making in the earth is said to be near Rybnik in Silesia, where the boring through strata of coal and rock has reached a depth of about 6,770 feet. The deepest boring in this country is believed to be an oil well at Pittsburg, which has reached a depth of 5,740 feet, but is to be bored much deeper for the sake of the information it may furnish to science.

A Chance to See Mercury.

It is only once in a while that this planet is easily visible, and perhaps the readers of the Companion will be glad to know that they will have an excellent opportunity to see it on April 27, and for two or three days before and after. It will not set until nearly two hours after the sun goes down, and will be fairly conspicuous in the western twilight as a ruddy star of the first magnitude, rather brighter than Aldebaran, and a little south and east of the Pleiades. Not a great deal is known about Mercury except that it is the nearest to the sun of all the planets, and the smallest of all except the asteroids, being only 3,000 miles in diameter; that it shows phases like the moon, and—a comparatively recent discovery—that it behaves like the moon in its diurnal rotation, turning on its axis only once while it makes a complete revolution in its orbit. Venus probably acts in the same way.—Youth's Companion.

Origin of the Horse.

Dr. Lydekker, the English naturalist, says that while the ordinary European breeds of horses may have been derived from those which were first subjugated by the stone-implement makers of western Europe, unnumbered centuries ago, it is probable that "thoroughbred" horses are of Eastern origin. He thinks that Turkestan was their original home, and that the ancient Turcomans and Mongols were the first Asiatic tribes to make the wild horse the servant and friend of man. Horses, believed by some authorities to belong to a truly wild race—that is to say, whose ancestors were never domesticated—still inhabit the central Asian steppes. From Turkestan, according to Dr. Lydekker, they spread to Hindustan, Persia, Assyria, Egypt and Arabia. In the last-named country they became so indispesable that many have supposed Arabia to be the original home of the horse. The interesting fact is pointed out that our North American Indians, to whom the horse was unknown before the advent of white men, have shown the same skill and adaptability in mastering them that the Arabs exhibited, so that, as Dr. Lydekker remarks: "Had we not historic evidence to the contrary, there is no saying but that the original subjugation of the horse might not have been attributed to the Indian of the prairies."

The Legion of Honor Limited.

Of all French institutions, perhaps only one of any national importance is a monument to the consulate. That one is the Legion of Honor, which Napoleon organized while that most transitional of governments was in existence. It appealed strongly to French instincts, has survived all the changes through which France has passed since that time, and its bit of red ribbon is still considered a sufficient reward for most important services to the state. Napoleon III. bestowed the decoration so widely and with so little regard for the character of the men whom he made chevaliers that for a while the order fell into some disrepute. Toward the close of that unfortunate monarch's reign there were about 25,000 civil members, besides all those who had been decorated as soldiers. To restore the prestige of the order, an act was passed in 1872 providing that only one new chevalier should be nominated for every two vacancies caused by death. The effect has been to reduce the number of civil knights to 10,000, but recent ministries have found the awarding of the few favors of this sort at their disposition created for them vastly more enemies than friends. The Meline cabinet has solved the difficulty, for itself, at least, by introducing and securing the passage of a law repealing the act of 1872, and substituting for it one fixing the number of civil knights permanently at 12,000. There was a long debate in the Chamber of Deputies on this bill, and the socialists opposed it fiercely, but the measure finally passed by a vote of 344 to 124.—New York Times.

WALKED 300 MILES FOR A JOB.

Experience of Young Walter Forward Looking for Work.

When Walter Forward—then 16—was working on his father's clearing in Ohio, an odd volume of Blackstone fell in his way. He pored over it at night, and resolved at whatever cost to become a lawyer. But how? He was in the wilderness. He knew the name of but one lawyer in the world, a certain Henry Baldwin, who lived in the village of Pittsburg, 300 miles distant.

With $2 in his pocket and his volume of Blackstone in a bundle hung on a stick over his shoulder, he started on foot to find him. He had but one shirt and only the clothes on his back. On his way he found an old horseshoe, which he put in the bundle for good luck.

Before he reached Pittsburg his money was gone. He could not pay for crossing the ferry to the town. The ferryman at last agreed to take the horseshoe as fare. Forward, on reaching the village, walked up the street, reading the signs. A man who was mounting a horse asked him what he was looking for.

"A lawyer named Henry Baldwin," he answered.

"I am he. What can I do for you, my lad?" Baldwin said kindly.

The boy told his story. Baldwin looked at him, and then handed him the key of his office and told him to take possession of it until his return. He remained with Mr. Baldwin twelve years.

Baldwin in time became judge of the Supreme Court and Forward one of the foremost jurists in the country. He was Secretary of the Treasury under Tyler, and later minister to Denmark.

Such stories as this illustrate the hard daily struggles of most of the men of that time. They knew nothing of the advantages which are now common and free as air to every American citizen. The son of the richest man then could in no way gain the training and the knowledge which are offered now in this country without cost to the poorest boy in the land. There were no public libraries. Franklin and his fellow mechanics rejoiced when they had bought and begged forty volumes. Washington and his colleagues had no advantages of foreign travel. Almost all that they saw of the world was gained in jogging along muddy roads through uncleared forest, between the little towns of New York and Philadelphia.

Yet there were giants in the land in those days.—New York Press.

Longevity and Sleeping by Compass

A Magdeburg physician, according to the Lyon Medical, who died recently at the age of 109, attributed his remarkable longevity to his constant practice of sleeping with his head to the north and his feet to the south. He considered this position most favorable to the magnetic currents which run constantly toward the north pole, and increase the energy of the vital principle. A correspondent of Dr. Felix Bremond "found that a kind of nervous irritation to which he was subject ceased when he placed the head of his bed a little east of north. This position of the head of the bed brought him more sound and peaceful slumber, and with such regularity that when he wished to rise earlier than usual in the morning, all he had to do was to change the direction of the head of his bed, when his sleep became lighter and of shorter duration. Dr. Bremond himself, however, found that the direction of his body made no difference to the soundness of his slumbers, provided he went to sleep in a comfortable bed, at the usual hour and at the end of a day of active work."—Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.

Farmers in Japan.

Japan is one vast garden, and as you look over the fields you can imagine that they are covered with toy farms where the children are playing with the laws of nature and raising samples of different kinds of vegetables and grains. Everything is on a diminutive scale, and the work is as fine and accurate as that applied to a Cloisonne vase. What would an Illinois or an Iowa farmer think of planting his corn, wheat, oats and barley in bunches and then, when it is three or four inches high, transplanting every spear of it in rows about as far apart as you can stretch your fingers? A Japanese farmer weeds his wheat fields just as a Connecticut farmer weeds his onion bed, and cultivates his potatoes and barley with as much care as a Long Island farmer bestows on his asparagus and mushrooms or his flowers.

HARMONY IN STRIPES.

Two Great Musical Organs Built by a Man in Sing Sing.

In the State prison at Sing Sing a convict is engaged in building two large organs for the two chapels—one Protestant, the other Catholic—which will occupy the first floor of the new administrative building. This man was an organ builder by profession before he entered the prison, understanding every detail of the instrument from its designing to making its most delicate part. He learned the trade in Canada, and has worked at every branch of the business there, in England and in this country. He seems to be an enthusiast in his profession, is a perfect encyclopedia of information concerning all the great organs of the world and is particularly well acquainted, from personal experience, with every joint and pipe of the great organ of St. Paul's Cathedral in London.

Warden Sage does not care to have the names of the inmates of the institution under his charge made public in cases like this of the organ builder. The man is skillfully and industriously performing a valuable piece of work for the State, and it is proper to respect his desire not to have his identity and present unfortunate circumstances advertised. Sufficient to say that he is working out in prison another of those wonderful specimens of ingenuity and talent on the part of a prisoner of which there are so many on record.

Upon being conducted by a prison officer into the little workshop located in the annex to the big administration building, the visitor is met by the organ builder, who, guessing that he has to deal with a reporter, proceeds at once to explain willingly and clearly the meaning and use of the various parts of the organs that occupy every available spot in the apartment.

It is estimated that it would have cost the State $3,100 to have had the organ for the Catholic chapel built in the ordinary way. The cost to the State for raw material to build both instruments will amount to about $260. The saving on both instruments will be about $5,900, that being the difference in cost of similar ones if built for its use at an outside manufactory. The organ for the Protestant chapel will be completed in September next; that for the Catholic chapel in July, 1898. There is no fear that the builder will be unable to complete both instruments, so far as his time is concerned, for, he says, he could build an organ for each of the other two prisons of the State before him term of imprisonment expires, that date being October, 1900.

The work on these instruments is entirely done by this one man; he has a helper, another prisoner, who, he says, is a handy fellow, but he is not an organ builder, consequently everything, from the original designs down to the smallest detail of the thousand and one articles that go to make an organ, all are originated, developed and executed by the brains and hands of this man, who certainly must have come within the dark shadow of prison life through some strange chain of adverse circumstances.—New York Tribune.

Going Visiting with the Baby.

Unless the conditions at the place to be visited are well understood, it is often a hazardous undertaking to go on a visit with a child.

If one is not on sufficiently good terms with the people who are visited, so that the necessary hints and suggestions as to the care and diet of baby will be received, the proceeding is extremely dangerous.

Difficulties arise, not only from the change in surroundings, etc., but in the fact that in many households no suitable diet is placed on the table for a child, and, in fact, none is to be had in the house. If the child depends upon milk, it is often impossible to procure that which is fresh or good.

An ordinary lunch of cold meat, bread and butter, pickles, preserves, and old, stale milk, is very far from being adapted to the child of one and one-half or two years.

This is the kind of food which a mother recently found spread for herself and child on a visit to a friend, and as a natural result the baby had colic.

At breakfast the following morning there were pancakes, followed by sausages, fried potatoes, hot rolls and coffee; not much of this was suited to a child of two years.

Simple things, like warm, fresh milk, with good bread and a little plain sauce, should be provided for the small people when they go on a visit.

Toasted bread and simple cereals, with hot or sterilized milk, will make the child thrifty, happy, and contented, avoid the danger of colic, and make the visit a pleasure to all concerned.—Healthy Home.

Nasal Notes.

There are fourteen bones in the nose.

The sense of smell is probably more acute in the dog than in any animal.

Some physiologists assert that the olfactory nerves are destitute of the power of sensation otherwise than to detect odors.

"Nosology" is not, as some might suppose, the science of noses. The term comes from two Greek words and signifies the scientific classification of diseases.

In the finny tribe there is no communication between the nasal cavities and the mouth. Fish do not use their noses in breathing, but breathe through their gills, so no communication is necessary.

Lobsters can smell as well as animals that live upon the land. A piece of decayed meat suspended in the water in the locality where lobsters are abundant will soon be completely surrounded by a greedy, fighting crowd.

The swordfish uses his nose as a weapon of offense and defense. This member is often several feet long and armed on each side with strong horns.

KILLED ON THE RAIL

LAST YEAR THERE WERE 540 DEATHS BY RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

Broken and Spread Rails a Prolific Cause of Disaster—Derailments Were Numerous—Defects In the American System of Collecting Information.

Of the 1,357 accidents reported during 1896, 792 were derailments, 514 collisions, and 51 were of a miscellaneous nature. Of the derailments, 78 resulted from defects of road, 188 from defective equipment, 66 from negligence in operation, 146 from unforeseen obstructions and 314 from unexplained causes. Those resulting from defects of road were caused in 26 instances by broken rails, in 16 cases by loose or spread rails, and in 19 others by broken bridges or trestles. Broken axles caused 74 accidents ascribed to defective equipment. Derailments due to negligence in operation resulted from misplaced switches in 28 cases. Unforeseen obstructions were accidental in 26 instances, malicious in 28, caused by animals in 24, by washouts in 23, and by snow or ice in 9. Of the collisions, 228 were from the rear. Other accidents were due to the following causes: Explosions, 15; broken parallel or connecting rod, 6; cars burned while in motion, 4; various breakages of rolling stock, 12; other causes, 14.

The notable disasters of the year occurred at Atlantic City and Logan, Ia. Seven passengers lost their lives in the accident on a small road in Arcata, Cal., last September. In October 7 were killed in a collision at Windsor Springs, Mo. Altogether 128 passengers were reported killed during 1896, which is 90 more than those killed the year previous. The whole number killed, including passengers, employees and others, is 540. Total number killed during 1895 was 415. Total number injured last year was 1,297; the year previous, 1,535. By far the greater proportion of all accidents reported during the last 24 years have been derailments.

These have been fewer, however, during the last year than in 1895, when 810 were reported. Two years before that (in 1893) 1,212 occurred, which was the largest number reported during a single year. Broken and loose or spread rails have been the chief causes of accidents occurring the last 24 years attributed to defects in road.

The American system of collecting statistical information respecting railway accidents is so incomplete as to render untrustworthy much available information. Many minor casualties occurring in remote territories, it is probable, are never reported at all, and the conclusions arrived at by coroners' juries are regarded with suspicion by those desiring impartial testimony concerning a subject of general interest and far-reaching importance. Although railroad commissions of various states supply additional data, such bodies are generally composed of politicians, most of whom are not qualified to deal with the technical aspects of the subjects considered, even if they were without bias in the matter. For these reasons it is impossible to trace the origin in many important though frequently recurring accidents with scientific exactness, but the advantages of having good railway material obtainable at reasonable rates will be obvious to any one familiar with the condition of numerous small roads.

In England the board of trade at regular intervals issues tabulated statements, giving full information as to the nature of accidents occurring on the various roads in the United Kingdom. These are thoroughly accurate and are accompanied by reports from inspecting engineers of the railway department concerning the cause and extent of every accident. Such investigations, therefore, are conducted by thoroughly experienced men, who are appointed for life and are prompted by no other motive than a desire to get at the facts in each case.—Railroad Gazette.

LOVE AND A PARSON.

A Romantic Marriage Which Seemed Prearranged by Providence.

A young attorney of Parkersburg, W. Va., procured a marriage license and left for Limestone Hill, Wirt county, for the purpose of bringing his intended bride to Parkersburg to be married. The couple started from the residence of the girl's parents and were overtaken by a violent storm, which caused them to seek shelter in a farmhouse on the roadside.

Shortly after they were under cover another traveler arrived and asked permission to remain until the storm subsided. In a short talk it developed that he was the Rev. Mr. Stephens, on his way to a church on his circuit, which discovery so impressed the young couple that they concluded that the storm was especially designed by Providence for their benefit and concluded to get married on the spot, which they did, returning to the home of the bride's family the same evening.—Exchange.

A SCIENTIST SAVED.

President Barnaby, of Hartsville College, Survives a Serious Illness Through the Aid of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

From the Republican, Columbus, Ind.

The Hartsville College, situated at Hartsville, Indiana, was founded years ago in the interest of the United Brethren Church, when the State was mostly a wilderness, and colleges were scarce. The college is well known throughout the country, former students having gone into all parts of the world.

PROF. ALVIN P. BARNABY.

A reporter recently called at this famous seat of learning and was shown into the room of the President, Prof. Alvin P. Barnaby. When last seen by the reporter Prof. Barnaby was in delicate health. To-day he was apparently in the best of health. In response to an inquiry the professor said:

"Oh, yes, I am much better than for some time. I am now in perfect health, but my recovery was brought about in rather a peculiar way."

"Tell me about it," said the reporter.

"Well, to begin at the beginning," said the professor, "I studied too hard when at school, endeavoring to educate myself for the professions. After completing the common course I came here, and graduated from the theological course. I entered the ministry, and accepted the charge of a United Brethren Church at a small place in Kent County, Mich. Being of an ambitious nature, I applied myself diligently to my work and studies. In time I noticed that my health was failing. My trouble was indigestion, and this with other troubles brought on nervousness.

"My physician prescribed for me for some time, and advised me to take a change of climate. I did as he requested and was soon improved. Soon after, I came here as professor in physics and chemistry, and later was financial agent of this college. The change agreed with me, and for a while my health was better, but my duties were heavy, and again I found my trouble returning. This time it was more severe and in the winter I became completely prostrated. I tried various medicines and different physicians. Finally, I was able to return to my duties. Last spring I was elected president of the college. Again I had considerable work and the trouble, which had not been entirely cured, began to affect me, and last fall I collapsed. I had different doctors, but none did me any good. Professor Bowman, who is professor of natural science, told me of his experience with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and urged me to give them a trial, because they had benefitted him in a similar case, and I concluded to try them.

"The first box helped me, and the second gave great relief, such as I had never experienced from the treatment of any physician. After using six boxes of the medicine I was entirely cured. To-day I am perfectly well. I feel better and stronger than for years. I certainly recommend this medicine."

To allay all doubt Prof. Barnaby cheerfully made an affidavit before

CHEAP IRRIGATION.

The Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, Cal., the largest builders of gas, gasoline and oil engines on the Coast, are making extensive preparations for the season's business.

They are filling several orders for large irrigating plants and as this line of their business increases each season, it is safe to say the farmers throughout the State are appreciating the advantages of irrigation with water pumped by this cheap power.

The Hercules Works are at present building an 80 H. P. engine for Geo. F. Packer, Colusa, which will raise 6,000 gallons per minute from the river and distribute it over his land. This will be the largest gasoline pumping plant in existence.

PASTORAL.

As the tender leaves look shyly
From the boughs that long were bare,
Whose dead foliage rustled dryly,
Withered hopes, still clinging there,
Southern winds again are breathing,
Soft reminders of the charm
That is blossoming and wreathing
Over Jack and Mollie's farm.

White the sunlit roadway glimmers,
Tiny gems in myriads gleam;
'Neath the bridge of planks there shimmers
Languidly, a loitering stream.
And a water snake is basking,
Confident that none will harm;
All make free without the asking
There at Jack and Mollie's farm.

Sheltering boughs have spread and heightened
Where the ivy's tresses fall;
Year by year its clutch has tightened
As it hugs the old stone wall.
Flowers grow in smiling splendor,
For a rugged, tireless arm
Toward these things is kind and tender,
Out at Jack and Mollie's farm.

Jack and Mollie, Jack and Mollie,
From your nook so far away,
You may watch the world of folly,
Fleeting madly, day by day.
Over you the years descending
Lightly fall without alarm,
Radiant still and softly blending,
Like the twilight o'er the farm.

BAD BILL JONES

"Professional bad men nearly always come to grief, and their reputations are usually smashed in some unexpected and often ludicrous manner," said a Western mine owner to a group of friends.

"I was working a claim at a mining camp in the Black Hills in 1879, when a professional bad man from the headwaters of Bitter Creek came along, put down stakes, and proceded to make it interesting for every one around, especially the few tenderfeet who had not been long in the West. Our bad man was a big, strapping fellow more than six feet tall, with a face that would convict him before any intelligent jury.

"He hailed from somewhere in Missouri and said that his name was Bill Jones. He also let it be known that he preferred to be called Bad Bill Jones, as that was the title he had earned by whipping every fighting man in four townships back in the States. Jones celebrated his arrival in camp by cleaning out the only saloon in the place at that time. He carried a six-shooter in every pocket and a Bowie knife in his bootleg.

"The fellow knew how to shoot; there was no mistake about that. He marched into the saloon the night of his arrival and ordered the bartender to set up drinks for the crowd. When the man at the bar demanded to see the color of his money in advance, Jones let out an Indian war-whoop and promptly shot out all the lights in the place, after he had perforated two or three hats and broken the necks off a few bottles with bullets.

"Some of the miners present got under the only table in the place and the others escaped by a side door. Jones helped himself to all the whisky he could drink, then went out and marched up and down the main street of the camp for an hour, firing off his pistols and yelling for some one to come out and fight him. Some of the boys were disposed to oblige him, but the bad man was then an unknown quantity, he had demonstrated that he could shoot, and wiser counsel prevailed.

"This one night's performance established the reputation of the man, and for a time he had his own way. The fellow knew little or nothing about mining and failed to strike dirt. In fact, he spent most of his time loafing about the saloon, looking for a fight. He was a loud talker, and at swearing he could beat any dozen men in the camp. We soon found that he was a bully and a dead beat. He would borrow money from the boys who were flush, and never repay them. He was careful, however, to obtain loans only from men who were afraid of him, and for that reason would not press him for payment.

"For a month Jones was not interrupted in his career of chief bad man of the camp. Long before the end of that time he was thoroughly disliked by every one in the place, but as he had not killed any one, nobody requested him to move on. One reason why he succeeded so well in the role he had set out to play was that every other man in the place was too much occupied in the scramble for gold to pay much attention to him. The impression that Jones was at heart a coward was gaining ground, but as he kept in constant practice with his pistols no one volunteered to put his courage to the test.

"Such was the state of affairs when one day the wagon train from the nearest town brought to camp the oddest specimen of the tenderfoot I ever saw. The newcomer was tall, but as thin as a rail, with a hatchet-like face, and pale, watery eyes. He was dressed in an outlandish rig, no garment of which came anywhere near a fit. A worn slouch hat, with a hole on the top, covered his head, and was pulled down to the eyebrows in front.

"The only baggage carried by the new arrival was a small bundle done up in a piece of faded blue cloth. The fellow had lost two front teeth, and a third one, long and yellow, protruded beyond the lips. On his chin there was a large black wart and a smaller one on the nose.

"The odd-looking tenderfoot climbed down from the wagon in a clumsy, hesitating way, and stood around for several minutes without speaking a word. Finally, he stepped up to the storekeeper, and, in a harsh, piping voice, asked:

"'Is this here the camp where William Jones has staked a claim?'

"'Do you mean Bad Bill Jones, from Missouri?'

"'He's from Missouri all right, and maybe he calls himself Bad Bill!' replied the stranger, with a sneer.

"'Then he has a claim somewhere up in the hills.'

"'Where does he camp?'

"'In there mostly,' said the storekeeper, pointing to the saloon next door.

"'Is he there now?' asked the stranger, with a look of interest, as he took a tighter grip on his bundle.

"'No; he went up to his claim to-day, but he'll be back pretty soon.'

"It was a fact. Jones had actually gone out that morning to make a bluff at working his claim, but we knew he would be back long before night.

"'Guess I'll wait till he comes,' said the stranger, after a short silence.

"The fellow stood around for a little while as if undecided what to do. He volunteered no information about himself, and the curiosity of the boys was aroused. The stranger finally walked across the street, and selecting a place from which he could command a view of the front door of the saloon, sat down on the ground, and opening his bundle took out a large piece of gingerbread, and began to eat.

JONES LET OUT AN INDIAN WAR-WHOOP AND PROMPTLY SHOT OUT ALL THE LIGHTS.

"Word was quickly passed around that there was a mysterious-looking stranger in camp looking for Bad Bill Jones, and the boys began to gather at the saloon in anticipation of fun of some kind. No one went near the stranger or made any attempt to learn his name or his business with the bad man. They knew they would not have long to wait for developments, and the sympathy of the entire crowd was with the odd-looking stranger.

"About an hour later we heard a yell down the street, followed by two pistol shots, and we knew that Jones had returned from his claim. That was his usual signal to let the boys know that he was in camp.

"Every one made a rush for the saloon, and when Bill walked in a few moments later he demanded to know what was up.

"'There's a new tenderfoot in camp; came up on the wagon train! Freshest-looking chap you ever saw!' volunteered the bartender.

"'New tenderfoot! Whoop! That's good! Trot him out. I'll make him dance and then buy drinks for the crowd, just by way of introduction to the camp!' roared Bill, and to emphasize his words he drew a pair of six-shooters and sent a couple of bullets through the roof.

"'Where is he? Bring him out and clear the floor for a dance!' shouted Jones, as he swaggered up to the bar.

"Just then the door opened, and the crowd inside made way for the stranger, who came in very quietly.

"At sight of the odd-looking figure Jones uttered another war cry, and pulling his pistols began to shoot holes in the floor around the feet of the stranger. The slouch hat of the latter was pulled so low as to almost entirely conceal his face.

"'Dance, — you! Dance for the boys, and be lively about it! I'm Bad Bill Jones, from Bitter Creek, and I run this camp!'

"As he shouted this command Jones sent a bullet into the floor, right between the feet of the stranger.

"To the surprise of the boys the stranger, neither danced, ran, nor begged for mercy.

"IS THIS HERE THE CAMP WHERE WILLIAM JONES HAS STAKED A CLAIM?"

"'William Jones!'

"It was the piping voice of the stranger, and, as he spoke, he sprang forward and made a grab at the tangled beard of the Bad Man from Bitter Creek.

"'Good Lord, it's her!' cried Jones, when he heard the voice of the stranger.

"The six-shooters dropped from the hands of the bad man, and he made a wild rush for the back door. It was all so sudden and unexpected that no one made a move to stop him. He reached the door and the street all right, but the stranger was close at his heels, and we heard the piping voice shouting, 'Come here, William! You can't lose me any more.'

"Once in the street, Jones ran for all he was worth, but he wore heavy cowhide boots, and the race was a short one. The stranger overtook him a block away, and, getting a good grip and twist on his long hair and beard, tangled together, led him back to the saloon as meek as a lamb.

"All the fight was gone from the bad man, and he was begging like a whipped child, when the stranger yanked him into the middle of the room.

"Backing Jones up against the bar, the stranger removed the slouch hat and disclosed the long, black hair of a woman.

"'Excuse me, gentlemen," she said, facing the crowd. 'I never had to do nothing like this before,' glancing at the outlandish trousers and coat she wore. 'William Jones here is my husband. I'm his wife, Mary Ann. He ran away and left me down in Missouri. I always kept him straight at home, but when he got away from me he tried to make folks think he could fight!

"'No, William, you ain't going to leave me!'

"Mrs. Jones gave the beard of the bad man another twist when she saw him glancing around, as if looking for a way of escape.

"'Now, there ain't a bit of fight in my husband. He never fought a man in his life. Did you, William? He's too lazy to fight or to work, but he ain't the same when he's away from me. He gets foolish notions in his head, and is always talking about fighting. He ran away and left me twice before, but I always brought him back. When I heard that he was up here calling himself Bad Bill Jones from Bitter Creek, I knew it was time for me to come for him. I didn't want to take no chances of his giving me the slip, so I put on these,' with another glance at the clothes.

"'I'm much obliged to you men for keeping hands off and not going against a poor, lone woman, with a worthless husband to manage. We'll start back for Missouri to-morrow, and when I get William home this time he'll behave himself. Won't you, William?'

"The answer of William was drowned in the shouts of approval from the crowd. The storekeeper proposed three cheers for Mrs. Mary Ann Jones, and they were given with a will.

"Next day, when she marched out, holding the penitent and discouraged William by the hair and they climbed up on the wagon to begin the return trip to Missouri, we gave her an ovation.

"NO, WILLIAM, YOU AIN'T GOING TO LEAVE ME!"

"We never had another bad man in that mining camp."

Alone in London.

An American clergyman whose dream it had been to visit England crossed the ocean at last for a ten weeks' vacation. For a fortnight he enjoyed going about alone from place to place, seeing the sights, but he soon became lonely, and then homesick. One Saturday morning he started out on a long walk, having no plan for the morning's recreation. He penetrated far into the wide reaches of the East End. There were crowds of men, women and children wherever he went, but not a face that he had ever seen before or would ever see again.

Turning from the busier streets, he found a narrow lane, and sat down on the stone step of a dreary tenement house. While he was sitting there, he heard a child's sobbing voice from the open hallway behind him. Looking around, he saw a little urchin crying as though his heart would break.

"What is the matter, my little fellow?" asked the clergyman, in his gentlest tone.

"Homesick, sir," said the child; "since mother died I have no home. I don't seem to belong to anybody. I want some one to talk to."

"Well, lad, there are two of us. I am very lonely, too.'

"But haven't you a home anywhere?"

"Yes, but it is a long way off, across the sea."

"Why don't you go back to it? If I only had a home, I would never leave it."

The lonely minister, who had found his vacation in the awful solitude of London unutterably depressing, did not have an answer ready. But his heart went out to the homeless little waif. He took the child out of the empty house, obtained decent clothes for him at a charitable institution, paid board for him at a lodging house, and finally carried him to America at the end of the vacation.

A Crawling Rug.

Among the first "instruments" to be used toward the education of the little son of the Duke and Duchess of York is a crawling-rug, designed by Miss Emma Windsor, who is famous for her intelligent interpretation of the Froebel idea of education.

Froebel, she says, constantly urged upon mothers the necessity of the infants' education beginning at their mothers' knee, and thinking of this has led me to the invention of the babies' crawling rug. It is a large floor-picture of animals, birds and domestic figures, made of real skin, swansdown, and other materials sewn on to flannel, and is quite in harmony with Froebel's idea.

For as soon as baby is put on the rug the first thing that the mite does is to begin to kick and stretch out its limbs; then it begins to roll over and look about, and tries to clutch at the pretty animals on the rug. Then baby finds it beyond its reach, and the first attempt to crawl is after puss, or some other equally familiar form which it sees on the rug.

The kicking, the stretching out the hand, the observation, the crawling, and so on, are all what Froebel calls education.

As baby grows older it learns, with the help of mother and nurse, to imitate the different sounds which the animals make, to pick out one from the other, and to learn their names.

Then baby should be taught to stroke each animal gently, and to speak its name in tender tones. Then the infant will early learn that love of animals calls forth the love of mankind.

It is a good plan to teach the baby to notice pictures of animals in children's books, and to call its attention to living animals and their actions. As the child grows older its delight in its zoological carpet increases; and children of seven years of age are known to greatly appreciate them.

The place for the rug is the nursery, the drawing-room, the bath-room, the seaside, and on shipboard.

Turned to Stone.

The Superstitious Mountains loom up from the arid desert to the east of the Salt River Valley. On the crest of this unique range, and in full view of the rarefied atmosphere for an immense distance from the plain, are hundreds of queer figures, representing men in all attitudes. When you look first you are sure they are men, and a second glance confirms the impression. They represent ball throwers, outlooks, mere viewers of the country roundabout, men recumbent and contemplate, others starting on a foot race, and in every conceivable posture and position. They are not real flesh and blood, however—nothing but stone sienite—yet it is impossible to convince the Indians, and some white men, that they are not genuine. They say they are real mortals turned to stone, petrified by the peculiar condition of the air on the mountains. The Indians will have nothing to do with the mountains. Their belief has grown out of an Apache legend handed down for hundreds of years. They have it that an ancient chief, who had learned of the curious character of the Superstitious Mountains, forbade any of his people to go there. A large band, however, one day discovered a way to get in by a precipitous route, and finally reached the top. It resulted as the chief had said—they never got down alive.

MEXICAN BOUNDARY.

LINE IS MARKED BY MONUMENTS OF IRON.

Incidents of the International Survey Recently Completed—Difficulties Experienced by the Boundary Commission.

Line Fixed at Last.

The official geographical boundary between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico has been established, and after many years of hard and dangerous work by Colonel J. W. Barlow, engineer-in-chief of the International Boundary Survey, and his men, the line has been marked by a series of boundary monuments, built of iron. Colonel Barlow's report has been sent to the Department of State at Washington, but will not be published for a year. Numerous fine illustrations are to be made to accompany the report, and when completed it will be one of the most interesting and attractive documents ever issued by the Government.

The war with Mexico, which closed with the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, entered into at the village of that name in 1848, resulted in the cession to the United States of the States of New Mexico and California, as then constituted. The southern boundary of this territory was not clearly defined, and a commissioner was appointed to mark the line, but managed to spend all of the appropriation before he commenced the work. W. H. Emory was then appointed, who, with a commissioner from Mexico, went about the work in a business-like manner, commencing at the Pacific coast. When the gold excitement of California reached the men at work on the line they abandoned the work and went to the mines, seriously retarding its progress. Later the commission succeeded in filling the places of the workmen and proceeded with the survey, which was finished to the first natural mark, the junction of the Gila and Colorado Rivers. However, before this work was complete the Gadsden treaty of 1853 made it necessary to move that part of the line east of the Colorado farther south to where it yet remains. This new line was to begin at a point on the Rio Grande commencing at parallel 31.47 and to run west along said parallel 100 miles, thence south thirty miles to parallel 31.20, thence west to intersection of third meridian, thence northwest to a point on the Colorado about twenty miles south of its confluence with the Gila. At the time of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo the diplomats were ignorant of the fact that the Colorado River from the junction of the Gila runs a little north of west for a distance of about six miles, and then resumes its general course southwest. This caused a line to be run on the south side of the river, where it was supposed when the treaty was made the river would form a natural boundary. Part of the town of Yuma and the territorial prison of Arizona have been built on this narrow strip of land, and a difference of opinion has arisen as to the true boundary between California and Arizona along this part of the line, and the matter has found its way into the courts. The question to be decided is whether the prisoners in the Arizona penitentiary are illegally confined in California when they should be in Arizona.

The Difficulties.

It is easy to understand the difficulties of surveying a line 700 miles in length without a supply point on the whole line. All supplies necessary to a large expedition, except a few articles of food, such as wheat, corn and fresh meat, and even those scarce and very dear, had to be conveyed either from the Pacific coast or the Gulf of Mexico. Railroads had not yet reached the wild and woolly West, and the few inhabitants were accustomed to the task of hauling freight with mules or oxen a distance which frequently reached 1,000 miles.

Although five years passed between the two treaties, only seven monuments, reaching from the Pacific coast to the confluence of the Gila and Colorado Rivers, had been set. These were of thin cast-iron, joined at the corners by rivets, except the one at the coast, which was of marble and very elaborate in design. After completing the western end of the line to the Colorado, the commissioners returned to the point where the Rio Grande forms the line, and worked in the opposite direction, transporting their supplies up the Rio Grande by freight teams. Working westward, they reached the Colorado River and marked the line with stone monuments at various distances apart. Three or four of these were substantial and yet remain, but the rest, about thirty-three in number, soon gave way to the hand of time. Some of them disappeared entirely, while a small pile of stones remained to mark the place where others were supposed to have been. This left the boundary between the two countries very poorly marked. Some new towns and ranches had sprung up along the line, and there was doubt as to which country they legally belonged. The tax collectors were frequently baffled and the revenue guards had some doubt about the line, although they knew by tradition approximately where they had a right to enforce the laws at the point of a gun. Some mines were discovered along the line, and in more than one place the mines were located on both sides of it. The United States import duty on lead and the Mexican export duty on gold and silver were of some importance, and the very high duties on liquors, all kinds of merchandise and live stock made the necessity for a well-defined line imperative.

The United States and Mexico finally agreed upon re-marking the boundary from the Rio Grande to the Pacific and upon the methods to be employed in the work. According to the stipulations monuments were to be erected not more than five miles apart, the weight of which should be not less than 500 pounds each, and the line should not be changed from where first located by previous treaties. Three years was allowed for making the line, and other minor details were left to the joint commission. The commissioners organized their respective expeditions and agreed to meet at El Paso, where the line begins, early in 1892.

The commissioners for the United States were J. W. Barlow, engineer-in-chief; A. T. Mossman, astronomer, and D. D. Gailliard, in charge of the field work. Mexico was represented by Jacobo Blanco, engineer-in-chief, an astronomical party and other assistants.

About seventy-five mules were purchased in Missouri by the United States commissioners, and an equal number of men was deemed necessary—engineers, astronomers, one computer, one photographer (the writer), one blacksmith, one carpenter, rodman, teamster, laborers, servants, and last, but not least important, cooks.

MONUMENTS ON THE MEXICAN BOUNDARY.

The Mexican Expedition.

The Mexican expedition was organized on the same plan, but not quite so extensive. They brought their mules from Mexico, but nearly everything else was of American manufacture—wagons, instruments, and, in fact, everything necessary for the expedition. Our appropriation for the work was $225,000, but the Mexican government allowed their commissioners a monthly allowance of $3,000 in Mexican silver. Fortunately for them, silver was almost at par when the work first began, but it dropped in price till they were compelled to sell their dollars for 50 cents and buy supplies at American prices.

The methods of running a long line on a parallel are different from ordinary surveying. It must run with the curve of the earth, and therefore a straight line runs off on a tangent from the true curve line, which at a distance of fifty miles, amounts to about 1,000 feet. As no telescope has yet been invented that will look around corners or long curve lines, it is necessary to calculate the distance at every monument station across to the true line. No compass is used in this kind of work, for various reasons, principally because it is not reliable, there being a continual as well as regular variation, which at San Diego amounts to 14 degrees. The heliotrope is used as a target for the transit, which, once started on the line, is sure to keep it. The longest distance at which this little instrument was used on this line was about ninety miles. The heliotrope is simply a combination of two mirrors that will reflect the sun in any direction, thus forming an artificial sun, as it were. The method of using it at a long range is to send a man ahead to a high elevation, when, by signals from the man in charge of the transit, he places it at a given point, where it must remain stationary until reached by the transit. The heliotroper must remain with it to keep the sun continually shining upon one of the mirrors, which are about three inches in diameter. There he must stay, it may be for days or it may be for months. For measuring the distance in this work the stadia method was adopted, which is simply calculating the space on an upright rod which comes between the cross-hairs of the transit. As the rod is moved away the space on the rod increases, and vice versa. This way of measuring the distance proved very satisfactory, and much more correct than the chain. It ranks next to the triangulation method for accuracy.

"When we reached Tiajuana, a little Mexican town twelve miles south of San Diego," wrote a member of the Barlow party recently, "we found the old cast-iron monument completely destroyed, nothing remaining but the base on which it formerly stood. We replaced the base with a very large one of concrete, in which we used six barrels of cement. On this we built a granite monument twelve feet high, with elaborate inscriptions, after which we placed a high steel fence around it for protection against relic hunters. But before our office work was finished at San Diego a terrible flood came down the Otai River, near which it stood, and undermined it, causing it to topple over into the roaring torrent, never again appearing in sight. The sand that washed down filling the bed of the river covered it so deep that it was never found, so that it was necessary to construct an entire new one at a more secure place. The final monument, No. 258, standing on the mesa overlooking the ocean, was originally a very fine one, but the relic hunters had continued to break off the corners until it was battered into a disgraceful condition. After recutting and re-engraving this beautiful piece of marble we placed a steel fence around it, which will probably protect it from the vandal hand of the relic hunter. This monument was shipped from Vermont around Cape Horn to San Diego in 1851, and from there conveyed on gun carriages belonging to the military post at San Diego to its destination, where it has ever since been an object of interest, especially to the Eastern tourist.

"It required about five months to finish the office work and print the photographs, after which the office was transferred to Washington, where the work is being prepared for the final report. An additional appropriation was necessary for making maps and finishing the report and paying a few other incidental expenses, so we find that the cost to each government will amount to $300,000, or $600,000 in the aggregate, which, with three years' work in the field, has given us a well-marked international boundary, with monuments intervisible from one to another at various distances from one-half to five miles apart, so that any part of the line may in the future be determined easily."

Manufacture of Wooden Boxes.

Among the thousands of industries whose headquarters are located in New York is the manufacture of wooden boxes. Over 90 per cent. of the business of the world in this particular line of goods is done through New York. It is not surprising, then, that the metropolis should boast of the largest and oldest box establishments in the world.

Fancy boxes of every description are made. They are all shapes, sizes and styles, and they are finished in a great variety of colors.

"It is not generally known, but it is a fact," said a prominent member of the trade, "that wooden boxes are cheaper than those made of paper, glass or tin."

They are shipped to almost every country in the world, one large New York house having established agencies in all the European countries, Asia and Australia.

Patent automatic machinery is used in their manufacture, and over ten million feet of lumber a year is made into boxes by one large New York firm alone.

Pigmy Races.

There are several pigmy races varying very little in size, and ranging from three and a half feet to four and a half feet in height. Among others are the Itas of the Philippines, the Andaman Islanders, and the Akkas of Central Africa. Of the African dwarf races, Emin Pasha states that the tribes near Lake Akkas average four feet one inch. Dr. Parke, who in 1886 discovered the Batwa, gives their average height as four feet three inches, but places them intellectually above the Nubian negroes. These races are regarded by some anthropologists as survivors of a race that may have once occupied a much wider region, extending, it is suggested, over India, North Africa, the Pyrenees, Switzerland and Central America.

AN OLD-TIME MINING EXCITEMENT WITH A CALIFORNIA PARALLEL.

Mining and Electrical Review.

By HENRY G. HANKS, F. S.

There is evidence of a natural law which is the indirect cause of mining excitements. The direct effect of this law is the transfer of human beings from lands they have exhausted in maintaining their lives to new, and therefore more fertile ones. An instinctive desire to seek an improved condition or sudden wealth in some far distant land, difficult of access, is inherent in man. * * *

The mining excitement in Owen's Valley, now Inyo county, Cal., in 1862, was indirectly caused by the discovery of the Comstock mine in 1859. All the lost-mine stories since the Death Valley tragedy were revived, and several parties started out in the hope of finding another great mine. Of these Dr. French's party in 1860 were practically the pioneers.

In the autumn of 1862 a small piece of mineral not larger than a hickory nut, as I remember it, was brought to San Francisco and shown to many people. Of this specimen—which showed considerable free gold—the following story was told:

While serving on picket-post duty a United States soldier, who had been actively engaged in the Indian war which followed the discovery of the Comstock, had the inclination to examine the rocks near his camp, from which he broke this single specimen. He described the locality as being in the range of mountains east of and parallel to the Sierra Nevadas; and forming the eastern boundary of Owens Valley, and ten or fifteen miles north of Owens Great Lake. Upon this showing some prominent men of San Francisco decided to send out an exploring party to search for the soldier's mine, or to discover others, and the San Carlos Exploring and Mining Company was organized.

A party of three was outfitted and sent away. One was a well-known mountaineer and author, another was an ex-cavalry captain who had served in the Mexican war, and the third one having some knowledge of geology, mineralogy and mines.

The explorers went to Stockton, purchased horses and pack mules, followed roads and trails to the Yosemite, thence to the crest of El Capitan, crossed the Yosemite Creek above the falls, camped at Lake Teneya, named some mountains including Cathedral Peak followed up Tuolumne Valley to Mono Pass, climbed down Bloody Canyon to Mono Valley and went by way of Monoville and the north shore of Mono Lake to Bodie and Aurora, where they remained for several days.

Leaving Aurora, the party continued their journey southward, passing along the eastern shore of Mono Lake, Adobe Meadows, Hot Springs and Whisky Flat to the head of Owens Valley, down which they traveled to a point where Owens River skirts the foothills of the Inyo Mountains, then unnamed. Here they made their camp, about six miles northeast from Camp Independence. From Bodie to this camp the party did not see a single human being excepting a timid young Indian who came to the camp to ask for food, for which he gave a full equivalent in labor; or any sign of habitation except a deserted cabin at Hot Springs, the owner of which had recently been killed by the Indians.

The next day after making camp, the party, within a mile, discovered a vein of rich galena. Some large masses of glittering ore were broken from the vein and piled in a goodly dump by the side of the discovery croppings.

From this time a genuine mining excitement began; miners, prospectors and adventurers came into the valley and the population thereby increased rapidly. Two rival towns, San Carlos and Bead City, were laid out, and prospectors swarmed over the foothills and mountains on both sides of the valley, and many discoveries of rich ores were made; but before these could be more than prospected, an Indian war broke out and all mining operations were practically suspended for months. Many families left the valley and others gathered at Union Mill, an adobe structure recently built. This building was fortified and the men organized for military duty, standing guard day and night. When these troubles were seemingly settled, many returned; but the same conditions being repeated caused another warlike outbreak. When at last the hostile Indians were driven from the valley or settled on reservations, mining was resumed, but the elements of failure began to appear. The first difficulty was the refractory character of the ores, refractory, however, only when fruitless efforts were made to reduce them by amalgamation. It was then discovered that mining companies, mostly in San Francisco, cared more to sell and manipulate stocks than to open the mines. Not a single hoisting plant was set up in the valley; a few shallow shafts revealed well-defined veins showing copper, lead, gold and silver. At that time such ores had no immediate value, for those containing gold could not be induced to part with that metal by any amalgamation process. Many miners, discouraged by these conditions, went to new districts that were continually being discovered. A few special mines were found, the superficial ores of which could be milled with success in a common quartz mill.

So-called base metal ores which were largely in excess of the free milling ones, were generally too poor at that time to warrant the high cost of shipment to the smelters. At first this was considered an insurmountable difficulty. Several attempts were made to introduce the Mexican mode of smelting in a small way, but only with small success. In 1864 a small experimental furnace was in operation. In 1866 the Cerro Gordo silver-lead mines were discovered, and in 1868 Colonel Stevens was smelting ores with success; his chief difficulty was the want of fireproof material.

In April, 1870, W. M. Belshaw & Co. (Egbert Judson) were successfully smelting these ores in blast furnaces. At that time they had at the works, ready for shipment, 1200 pigs or bars of lead, all rich in silver. Ore containing less than 200 ounces of silver to the ton was considered second class. In April, 1873, there were 18,000 bars of lead on hand at the furnaces, the estimated value of which was $600,000, and 112 mule freight teams were employed in hauling lead from the foot of the lake to Los Angeles. Two furnaces turned out 14 tons daily, valued at $28,000.

The following figures show the importance of these mines and the smelting operations:

Argentiferous lead or bullion produced in six years: 1869, 1000 tons; 1870, 1500 tons; 1871, 2500 tons; 1872, 4000 tons; 1873, 5000 tons; 1874, 6000 tons; total, 20,000 tons. This output was valued at $1,800,000, which is equal to $90 per ton.

About the same time the silver mines at Blind Springs were extensively worked and produced much bullion.

Great gold mines are the exception, while so-called "base metal mines" at certain localities are more numerous. The ores of all known mines are variable as to quality and quantity; these ores as a rule lie in deposits or bodies, of greater or less magnitude; when one is exhausted another must be sought; quality and quantity cannot be known except by exploration.

It is an expensive operation to smelt ores at the mines with charcoal and generally more so with imported coke; when the argentiferous lead has by this process been reduced to the metallic state, it has only been concentrated, and must still be shipped to a market; besides this, much mineral matter of value, such as sulphur, arsenic, antimony, iron, etc., is wasted, and a no inconsiderable quantity of metal is left in the slags. For these reasons, if for no others, it would be better, for some years at least, to ship the ores, properly concentrated by wind or water power, and sell them to the smelters, whose business is to so mix and manipulate them as to obtain the best results where fuel, plant and labor are cheaper and all conditions more favorable.

There is still another very important consideration bearing on this subject. The buying and selling of smelting ores makes an immediate capitalist of the most humble miner. As soon as it becomes known that a locality can produce a quantity of smelting ores, metallurgical companies will gladly send agents to purchase them.

This would not only make a competition favorable to the miner, but would furnish capital to work their mines. To suppose a case: A miner takes out, say, 10 tons of selected ore; this under conditions named could be readily sold. With the money received the miner could take out, say, 20 tons more, without paying interest on the small capital now at his disposal. A succession of such sales would make it possible for him to put up concentration works, by the use of which he could change his low-grade ores to high-grade concentrates.

I have shown that in Owens Valley, water and water power are very abundant, and that by their use the concentration of ores can be brought to a standard of great perfection. Such concentrates would have nearly the value of the smelted metal.

From my own personal experience, I think that many such mines might be opened and profitably worked within 200 miles radius of Owens Lake. After 35 years in which to consider this matter, I still hold the same opinion.

The many local mining excitements which followed the discovery of the Comstock—for example, Reese River, Esmeralda, Bodie, White Pine, Slate Range, Coso, Montgomery, Kern River, Darwin, Telescope, Panamint and others—were not without foundation and were not wholly speculative. I have given the reasons why these and other districts were practically abandoned and the superficial character of the attempts made to develop them. When we consider that within the last thirty years many thousands of tons of pig lead, containing about 45 ounces of silver to the ton (in some years as much as 9000 tons) have been resmelted and reduced from slags left by the ancient Greeks at the mines and furnaces of Laurium, 300 years before Christ, we may excuse Pacific coast miners who temporarily suspended operations on mines which conditions prevented their working to advantage. I have also recorded success under difficulties in smelting the ores of the Cerro Gordo mines and ask, Is it visionary to believe that other mines of similar character will be developed when conditions are better understood? I am unwilling to believe that the Cerro Gordo, Comstock, Esmeralda, Reese River or White Pine mines are by any means exhausted.

During a residence of nearly three years in Owens Valley, I knew of the discovery of many surface ores exceedingly rich in gold, silver, copper, lead, antimony, bismuth and iron, besides deposits of marble, limestones and other building stones, salt, borax, soda and other economic minerals of less importance. It is not to be supposed that these rich ores fell from the skies. The science of geology is sadly at fault if they were not naturally concentrated in terrestrial rocks in places.

I am not prepared to predict that even a majority of these discoveries will develop into great mines, but I am convinced that when properly opened, some of them will be found to be prolific and will be worked successfully, like the mines of Spain, Austria, Saxony-Hungary, Norway and Sweden, Greece and other old mining countries.

With some experience as a traveler in foreign countries, I know of no finer, grander scenery than may be found in the Sierra Nevada Mountains on the west side of Owens Valley, and it has always been a mystery to me why tourists and railroad companies do not realize this fact. Beerstadt made some of his most interesting studies in these mountains and Wm. Keith in his famous painting, "The Heart of the Sierras," has pictured mountain scenery similar to that which I have so often admired.

If the owners of the Carson & Colorado Railroad, which now runs the entire length of the valley, would advertise the natural beauties of the route, they would soon become favorably known, and the Swiss chalet and the commodious hotel would not long be wanting.

Owens Valley, although in its natural state a desert, is not without beauty; and it can be wholly irrigated by Owens River and other mountain streams and made to resemble the valley of the Nile. Unlimited water power is everywhere available. The valley is an elevated inclined plateau about 100 miles in length by ten or more miles in width, surrounded by mountains on all sides. It is easy of access from the north and south, but the few east and west passes are abrupt and difficult.

One may sit on a hot summer day by the side of beautiful, green fringed meandering Owens River and see in plain sight, as Shasta from Sisson, not a single peak, but a grand range of snowy ones, and many a mountain valley through which the snow is drifting. Taking one of many mountain trails leading up wild, rocky canyons, the pleasure-seeking tourist may easily reach a locality where it is perpetual winter, or at least where the snow lies ever unmelted.

From this elevated position a retrospective view must naturally arouse in the mind of the beholder emotions of the most pleasing nature. While the crisp Alpine breezes, cooled by the snow upon which he stands, keeps the pine branches in constant motion, he may see to the eastward a strip of sloping land having the color and sheen of a Quaker maiden's garment, and he need not be told that the wavy, green ribbon before him is Owen's River, and that what appears a metallic disc glittering in the sunlight is Owens Great Lake.

An excursion up the grand canyon through which Owens River flows down the mountain side would be found full of interest; and there are several small craters from which fiery lava once flowed and now lies in sable confusion, a deposit known as "The Black Rocks." There are also several small cones from which the volcanic ashes were once ejected. At Hot Springs, from a trachyte hill, a large stream of nearly boiling water bursts out, which I once saw reluctantly performing the menial labor of rotating a badly constructed water wheel, which in turn gave motion to a battery of stamps.

There is also on the east side of the valley the "White Mountain" of dolomite, like that used in the lower story of the Mills Building in San Francisco. These are a few of the natural objects of interest which occur to me as I write.

Owens Lake is a great natural curiosity, interest in which would not be satiated during weeks of study. The tourist would here find a striking similarity to the Dead Sea and the Jordan, and would be well paid if this were the only natural feature of interest. Almost due west from the mouth of Owens River, and about 18 miles distant, stands Mount Whitney, the grandest and highest mountain in the United States, and so easy of access that it is said that a lady can ride to the summit.

I could mention other inducements for tourists to visit this interesting locality, but the purpose of this paper is to give information as to its mineral resources rather than to describe the beauties of nature.

I trust my readers will not construe anything I have written into advice to rush to Owens Valley or any other special mining district on a venture.

Such mines as I hope to see developed will eventually require the investment of large capital. The valley is now quite settled up, much of the best land is occupied, and perhaps the best known mining localities are claimed. Chances may still be better there for new discoveries than in older mining districts. The time for taking advantage of a wholly unexplored country, or for speculative booms, has passed, but legitimate mining on the Pacific coast on a large scale will continue for many generations.

Application for Patent.

NOTICE No. 310.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, Independence, Calif.
May 5, 1897.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT R. C. Chambers, whose residence and post office address is Salt Lake City, Utah, by A. A. Neu, his Attorney in fact has made application for a United States Patent for the Eureka, Clarence King, & Climax consolidated (embracing the Eureka, Clarence King & Climax lode locations) lode mining claims situate in Union Mining District, Inyo County, California, consisting of 1,500 1,500 and 1,500 linear feet respectively of the lode, and surface ground 600, 600 & 600 ft. wide respectively, being lots No. 37, 38, & 39 and described in the field notes and plat of the official survey on file in this office, with magnetic variation at 15 degrees 46 minutes east, as follows:

Commencing at the southeast corner of the Eureka claim, and running thence north 63 deg. ¼ west 9.09 chs. 600 ft. to the southwest corner of the Eureka, from which corner the corner to sections 1, 2, 11 &12, T. 12 S. R. 34 E. Mt. On Sunday, July 4, religious services will be held as follows:

Lone Pine, at 11 a. m.
George's Creek, at 2:30 p. m.
Independence, at 7:30 p. m.

Subject: "Tyrannical Oppression, and the Calling of a Great Deliverer."

All are cordially invited.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

Mrs. H. Levy arrived home on Wednesday's train from a week's visit at Big Pine.

P. W. Forbes Esq. will deliver the Fourth of July address at Big Pine tomorrow.

Irving Woodin Jr. arrived at Independence yesterday morning for the summer holidays.

Mr. La Prairie has returned from a prospecting trip to Tule Canyon and Mill Creek.

Mr. Elder, representing Haas, Baruck & Co. of Los Angeles, is traveling through the valley.

Joseph Seely got back on Wednesday evening from a trip to Carson and other points in that vicinity.

The ladies about town have made arrangements to have an ice cream booth on the Fourth, the proceeds to be devoted to the church.

Mrs. A. J. McCarthy and Mrs. A. Church will arrive at Independence this evening from Hawthorne, and will spend the Fourth here.

In the case of the estate of Foley, the murdered capitalist, at Reno, the jury found that the Eastern heirs were entitled to $76,000, one-half the estate.

Marshal Naylor and Charles Homer have gone to work on the Schroeder mine, on Mount Kearsarge. There is some high-grade silver ore in this mine.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Densmore arrived home yesterday morning from a month's visit with Mrs. Densmore's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Craig, in Southern California.

Mrs. W. F. Matlack, accompanied by her two daughters, Misses Edna and Lizzie Matlack, arrived home on Thursday's stage from a visit of several months at Los Angeles and San Francisco.

There will be a Fourth of July celebration in every town in the valley. This is as it should be. Everybody should join in celebrating the nation's birthday, and everybody cannot afford to go a long way from home.

"Last summer one of our grand-children was sick with a severe bowel trouble," says Mrs. E. G. Gregory of Fredericksburg, Mo. "Our doctor's remedy had failed; then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which gave very speedy relief." For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

A change has been made in the time of the arrival and departure of the mail. The stage now leaves here Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings at 5:55 a. m., arriving at 8:35 a. m. On Mondays, Wednesdays and Sundays it leaves at 3:55 p. m., and arrives at 6:35 p. m. This is half an hour earlier, both morning and evening.

THE FOURTH.

The Fourth of July committee has completed its arrangements, and the success of the affair is completely assured. An excellent literary programme will be rendered. The games and sports will furnish amusement for young and old. A platform has been erected in the shade of the Courthouse grove and the exercises will be held there. Long tables will be set under the trees and an abundance of good things provided. Everybody is invited to participate and bring their lunch baskets. The committee has made arrangements to serve ice cream free with the picnic dinner. The ball in the evening will be the event of the season. The large Pavilion will be roomy and cool, and good music provided. Don't miss the day, and bring all the children.

Real Estate Transfers

The following deeds were filed for record during the week ending July 1, 1897:

Josie Turner to Fred Horath and Jos. Horath—80 acres land near Big Pine; consideration $1250.

C. F. Fuller et al. to J. E. Laird—San Jose mine, Coso mining district; consideration $5.

Jack Mallory to W. H. Wells—Water rights in Round Valley; consideration $60.

Inyo Academic Association to S. S. Allen—Lot in Academy addition to town of Bishop; consideration $50.

Frank Bennett to C. H. Barlow—Lottery, Kern, Arronda and one-fourth interest in Monrovia mines; consideration $5000.

A Good Advertisement.

On another page will be found an extract from an article written by Henry G. Hanks, for many years State Mineralogist, and published in the Electrical and Mining Review. Anything from the pen of Mr. Hanks is sure to command attention and respect, and will be widely read. This article cannot help but have a good effect on the mining industries of this county. Mr. Hanks spent several years in this section and knows whereof he speaks. The Inyo range of mountains is known to be highly mineralized throughout its entire length, and there is no better field for the intelligent prospector. There are also many good prospects already discovered where an investment of capital cannot fail to yield large returns. The isolation of the county has prevented a thorough exploitation of its wonderful resources. But when brought to the notice of the outside world by such men as Mr. Hanks, capital will surely find its way here and develop the latent mining resources.

For Campers

The local Land Office is in receipt of the following circular relating to fires in the Government reservations and the information contained therein is peculiarly applicable to this season of the year:

Department of the Interior,
General Land Office,
WASHINGTON, D.C., March 13, 1897.

For the information of all concerned, attention is called to the following Act of Congress, approved February 24, 1897, entitled "An act to prevent forest fires on the public domain."

Registers and receivers, United States land offices, and special agents, General Land Office, should promptly report to the proper U. S. attorney information they receive relative to the violation of the provisions of the this law.

E. F. BEST, Acting Com'r.

Approved: C. N. BLISS, Secretary.

Following is the text of the act to prevent fires on the public domain:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any person who shall willfully or maliciously set on fire, or cause to be set on fire, any timber, underbrush or grass upon the public domain, or shall carelessly or negligently leave or suffer fire to burn unattended near any timber or other inflammable material, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof in any district court having jurisdiction of the same, shall be fined in a sum not more than $5000 or be imprisoned for a term of not more than two years, or both.

"Sec. 2. That any person who shall build a camp fire or other fire in or near any forest, timber or other inflammable material upon the public domain, shall, before breaking camp or leaving said fire, totally extinguish the same. Any person failing to do so shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the same, shall be fined in a sum not more than $1000, or be imprisoned for a term of not more than one year, or both.

"Sec. 3. That in all cases arising under this act the fines collected shall be paid into the public school fund of the county in which the lands where the offense was committed are situate."

Criminal proceedings—In addition to the penalties prescribed in the above act, Sec. 4 of the act of June 3, 1897, 20 Stat. 89, provides that "it shall be unlawful to * * * wantonly destroy any timber growing on any lands of the United States" in "the States of California, Oregon and Nevada and in Washington Territory"; and "any person violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, on conviction, shall be fined for every such offense a sum not less than $100 nor more than $1000. See act cited in full on page 67.

This act is made applicable to all the public-land States by the act of August 4, 1892 (27 Stat., 348; see page 70).

Civil remedies—In addition to the wanton destruction of public timber by fire, or otherwise, being a criminal offense, the United States have all the common-law civil remedies, whether for the prevention or redress of injuries, which individuals possess. See 3 Wheaton, 181, and 11 Howard, 229, under "Civil Liability," page 15.

The following notice was prepared for posting generally throughout the forests on the public lands:

Dept. of the Int., Gen. Land Office,
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 12, '94.

The attention of the public is called to the fact that immense areas of the public forests are annually destroyed by fire, originating in many instances through the carelessness of prospectors, campers, hunters, sheepherders and others, while in some cases the fires are started with malicious intent.

Warning is hereby given that the origin of all forest fires will be closely investigated, and when the fire is ascertained to have originated through carelessness or design, the persons implicated will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

The public generally is requested to aid the officers of the Government in the efforts to check the evil referred to and in the punishment of all offenders.

ED. A. BOWERS,
Acting Commissioner.

Approved: HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

MONDAY, June 28, 1897.

Mathiason et al. vs. Norveil et al.—Motion for defendants for nonsuit granted and restraining order dissolved.

Reasons Why Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy is the Best.

1. Because it affords almost instant relief in case of pain in the stomach, colic and cholera morbus.

2. Because it is the only remedy that never fails in the most severe cases of dysentery and diarrhœa.

3. Because it is the only remedy that will prevent bilious colic.

5. Because it is the only remedy that will cure epidemical dysentery.

6. Because it is the only remedy that can always be depended on in cases of cholera infantum.

7. Because it is the most prompt and most reliable medicine in use for bowel complaints.

8. Because it produces no bad results.

9. Because it is pleasant and safe to take.

10. Because it has saved the lives of more people than any other medicine in the world.

DON'T TRUST IT.

Because the weather is mild and the air balmy we cannot count on being rid of rheumatism or neuralgia. The very sudden changes of temperature or exposure to draughts are both likely to increase rather than diminish both complaints. For this reason it is wise at this season to be well prepared for sudden attacks, and to have ready what is known as the best remedy for all visitations of aches or pains. All well regulated households ought to have a nook or corner for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil. There are other reasons also why this master-cure should be kept at hand: rheumatism and neuralgia are chronic, acute or inflammatory, but to whatever degree of suffering they may come, the old reliable cure is the best for treatment and the surest to give permanent relief.

An Imported Tarantula.

A young tarantula which had traveled in a bunch of bananas from South America via New Orleans was captured recently in a commission house at Denver. The man in charge of the ripening room found the poisonous insect clinging to the wall of the room. He first knocked it off into a cigar box and later it was transferred into a glass jar and now is on exhibition in the company's office. In size the body is a little over an inch long and about half an inch wide, and its stride will cover five inches. That it is a young one is evidenced by the fact that no hair has appeared as yet on any part of its body. Full grown, these insects are hideous in appearance by the great growth of hair that covers limbs and body.—Rocky Mountain News.

Too Much Knife!

The use of the surgeon's knife is becoming so general, resulting fatally in such a large number of cases, as to occasion general alarm.

Mr. William Walpole, of Walshtown, South Dakota, writes: "About three years ago, there came under my left eye a little blotch about the size of a small pea.

It grew rapidly, and shooting pains ran in every direction. I became alarmed and consulted a good doctor, who pronounced it cancer, and said that it must be cut out. This I would not consent to, having little faith in the indiscriminate use of the knife. Reading of the many cures made by S. S. S., I determined to give that medicine a trial, and after I had taken it a few days, the cancer became irritated and began to discharge. This after awhile ceased, leaving a small scab, which finally dropped off, and only a healthy little scar remained to mark the place where the destroyer had held full sway.

BECAUSE HE DRANK.

A Little Girl, Desperate Because of Her Father's Inebriety, Tries Suicide.

Because her father again came home intoxicated, Concepcion Almarez, a Mexican girl living in San Francisco, made an attempt at suicide. Her life was saved only by the long and patient work of her uncle and a physician. The father, Ramon Almarez, is the son of Don Juan Vicente Almarez, who was once the largest landowner in San Luis Obispo county.

Ramon has been drinking considerably for years and has grown poorer each year. When he and his daughter moved from San Fernando to Puente last December, it was in hope that he might reform. For a few weeks Ramon kept his resolution, and those were the happiest days for little Concepcion in years.

Ramon broke his pledge, and from that time he has been drinking harder than ever.

One night recently Ramon came home from Azusa and was again intoxicated.

The girl and her uncle got her father out of the wagon and carried him into the adobe house. Concepcion left the house, and when 8 o'clock came her uncle started out to find her. On the dirt floor of her bedroom he found a farewell note to her father to the effect that she could no longer endure the shame and poverty his drunkenness had brought upon her, so she had gone away to die.

After a long search her relative found her in a field. She was in a stupor, and he carried her to a physician. It was found that Concepcion had taken morphine. Antidotes were given her, and it was not long till she was declared out of danger. Her father has vowed not to use intoxicants again.—San Francisco Examiner.

A MASTODON'S SKULL.

It Is Considered the Most Perfect Specimen In Existence.

The museum of the Missouri state university has just received the most perfect skull of a mastodon in the world. This is the belief of eminent geologists who have viewed the gigantic relic, and when the skull is described this statement will perhaps not be disputed.

It has just been presented to the museum by R. A. Blair, a well known geologist of Sedalia, Mo. He reserves the privilege of reclaiming the skull, but it is probable that it will remain in the university museum. With the skull was found other mastodon remains of less value, and they are also on exhibition here. The whole forms the most valuable collection of the kind in the world.

The next largest and most valuable collection of mastodon remains is in the British museum, and third in value is one at Berlin. Both these collections are made up almost altogether of remains found in Missouri.

The skull now on exhibition here was taken from an old pond in Pettis county, Mo.

It was not until recently that geologists heard of the curiosity and steps were at once taken to remove the bones from their resting place.—Kansas City Times.

CRAZY ABOUT AIRSHIPS.

A Widow Imagines That She Has Built a Flying Machine.

The published reports of airships being seen all over the country have caused an estimable woman of Findlay, O., to go stark mad.

Mrs. Eleanor A. Woodruff, a widow of good family, recently appealed to a neighbor to build her an airship, saying she had all the plans in her head, and if he would build it for her that day she would navigate it that night.

She was put off with an evasive answer, but at night she became wild, and, going out into the street, stopped all passersby, and, pointing to the western heavens, wanted to know if they didn't see her airship. She pointed directly to the bright evening star and said it was the light of her ship, in which she would take them all around the world. The unfortunate woman was placed in custody and will be taken to the Toledo asylum.

Makes Murder Expensive.

A South Carolina jury has granted a verdict of $6,000 damages in favor of the administrator of a murdered man against his convicted murderer. Should this become a precedent for similar verdicts, a murderer will not only have to undergo the death penalty, but he will be placed at considerable financial loss also. Possibly that may make murder less attractive to some criminals.

for those who find it.

What is the missing word in the following sentence:

Schilling's Best tea is not only pure but it is----------because it is fresh-roasted.

Get a package of Schilling's Best tea at your grocers; take out the Yellow Ticket; send it with your guess to Schilling's Best Tea, San Francisco, by August 31st.

One guess allowed for every yellow ticket. If your guess reaches us before July 1st, you are entitled to two guesses for each ticket.

If only one person finds the word he gets $1000. If several find it, the $1000 will be divided equally among them.

Every one sending a yellow ticket will get a set of cardboard creeping babies at the end of the contest. Those sending three or more in one envelope will receive a charming 1898 calendar, no advertisement on it.

In addition to the $1000 offered we will pay $100 each to the two persons who send in the largest number of Schilling's Best yellow tickets before June 15th.

Cut this out. You won't see it again for two weeks.

Dr. Newly—I make bicycle accidents a specialty.—New York Tribune.

Never Saw Ice Before.

One of the funniest sights I ever saw was a South Sea islander with his first chunk of ice, remarked the captain of a trading schooner. I was lying at anchor at one of the Navigator islands once when some natives came aboard. It was an awfully hot day, and I had been getting some ice up from below. The natives looked at it curiously, so I handed one a chunk. The moment it touched his hand he dropped it like hot shot and looked at his palms to see if they were burned. After a deal of jabbering they all sat around it and watched it as it melted. They couldn't understand it, at all, and when there was nothing left but a wet spot on the deck they sat around it and discussed the phenomen. I put a piece of ice in my mouth and then gave them some. They shifted it from one hand to the other, put the tips of their tongues on it gingerly and finally ate the chunk. It was a source of great wonder to them.

Quid Pro Quo.

The Junior Partner—Did you see Grinder about extending that note?

The Senior Partner—Yes. He said he was willing to extend the time if we would extend the size.—Cincinnati Tribune.

A Minute Lamp.

Physicians occasionally use, for the purpose of illuminating parts of the interior of the body, a delicate electric lamp, called the "pea lamp," because its little glass bulb resembles a small pea in size, being only one-quarter of an inch in diameter. It is, nevertheless, a complete incandescent lamp, having a carbon film one-eighth of an inch long, and about one-two-thousandth part of an inch in diameter.

Our Wealth in Grass.

Mr. Scribner, of the Department of Agriculture, has recently collected some very interesting facts about American grasses. He says: "We have better grasses and a greater variety of them native to our soil than we can ever get from Europe." Of clovers we have no less than sixty species, all native to the country, and there is an equal number of different "blue grasses," besides twenty "grazing grasses," and a great variety of others. Yet, Mr. Scribner says, hardly more than a dozen of all these kinds of native grasses have been brought into cultivation.

An Under-Sea Tunnel.

The Italians are considering plans for the construction of a double tunnel about two miles in length, between the toe of Italy and the island of Sicily. The tunnel is to run under the Straits of Messina, not far from the site of Scylla and Charybdis, the rocks and the whirlpool, which were so dreaded by ancient mariners. It was at first proposed that a bridge be thrown across the straits, but it was thought that this would be too much exposed to the winds, which are occasionally violent between the opposing mountains of Sicily on one side and Calabria on the other.

Peculiarities of Sakhalin.

Curious facts have lately come to light concerning the island of Sakhalin, which lies off the eastern coast of Siberia. Cold winds and sea-currents circulate around it, and their effect appears to be to produce on the island a reversal of the ordinary course of nature respecting the arrangement of temperature. Usually the air is warmest near sea-level, and coldest on highlands and mountains, but in Sakhalin the coldest air is found near the sea, and there the plants are of an Arctic character, while in the lofty interior of the island the climate is mild, and even subtropical plants flourish on the heights.

Sweeping with Wind.

In some of the Chicago railway yards compressed-air brooms are employed for sweeping and dusting the carpets and upholstery of the cars, and the results are said to be satisfactory. The compressed air is led from a power-house through an underground pipe, to which a hose is attached in the car-yard. Affixed to the end of the hose is an iron nozzle as long as an ordinary broom-handle, and having at its extremity a fixture of brass about a foot broad, and furnished with a long slit a thirty-second of an inch in width, through which issues the compressed air at the rate of seventy-five cubic feet a minute. The dust does not stay long in front of that current.

Artificial Rubies.

In a recent lecture Prof. A. P. Brown of Philadelphia described the methods now practiced for making artificial gems. Although minute diamonds can be made, with the aid of the electric furnace, none large enough to be employed in jewelry have yet been produced. But rubies of large size, and as fine in color and appearance as the best natural gems, have been made. The ruby is composed of oxide of aluminum. A certain method of detecting artificial rubies is by examination with a microscope. The natural gem is always filled with minute cracks, invisible to the naked eye, but perfectly discernible with a high magnifying power. The artificial ruby has no cracks, but, on the other hand, is filled with minute bubbles, or gas-holes. This test, according to Professor Brown, is the only one by which the best artificial rubies can be distinguished from the same gems as nature makes them.

A New Exploration.

The American Museum of Natural History is soon to begin a systematic exploration of the coasts of Asia and North America, from the Amoor River in Asia to the Columbia River on our continent. The object is to study the various peoples inhabiting these regions, in order to settle, if possible, the question whether the Asiatics once crossed to America by way of Kamchatka and the Aleutian Islands. Among the principal things studied will be the various languages now spoken in Northeastern Asia and Northwestern America, and some idea of the extent of this subject may be obtained from the alleged fact that "between the Columbia River and Bering Strait ten languages are found that are fundamentally distinct, and these languages have thirty-seven dialects which are mutually unintelligible." On the Asiatic side, it appears, the confusion of tongues is not quite so great, although the number of distinct languages spoken there is seven, and the number of mutually unintelligible dialects ten. The explorations are to cover a period of six years, and the money has been furnished by a wealthy New Yorker, Mr. Morris K. Jessup.

A DANGEROUS LETHARGY.

The forerunner of a train of evil, which too often culminate fatally, is inactivity or lethargy of the kidneys. Not only is Bright's disease, diabetes, gravel, or some other dangerous integral disease of the organs themselves to be apprehended, but dropsical diffusions from the blood, rheumatism and gout, are all traceable to the non-removal from the blood by the kidneys of certain impurities. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters depurates the blood, renders the kidneys active and prevents their disease.

"You didn't resent my denial of our engagement?" "No, Mr. McWoozie; I inferred that you meant it as complimentary to me."

CHEAP IRRIGATION.

The Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, Cal., the largest builders of gas, gasoline and oil engines on the Coast, are making extensive preparations for the season's business.

They are filling several orders for large irrigating plants and as this line of their business increases each season, it is safe to say the farmers throughout the State are appreciating the advantages of irrigation with water pumped by this cheap power.

The Hercules Works are at present building an 80 H. P. engine for Geo. F. Packer, Colusa, which will raise 6000 gallons per minute from the river and distribute it over his land. This will be the largest gasoline pumping plant in existence.

Syrup of Figs

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

BABY HAS GONE TO SCHOOL.

The baby has gone to school; ah, me!
What will the mother do,
With never a call to button or pin,
Or tie a little shoe?
How can she keep herself busy all day,
With the little hindering thing away?

Another basket to fill with lunch,
Another "good-bye" to say,
And mother stands at the door to see
Her baby march away;
And turns with a sigh that is half relief
And half a something akin to grief.

She thinks of a possible future morn,
When the children, one by one,
Will go from their homes to the distant world,
To battle with life alone,
And not even baby be left to cheer
The scattered home of that future year.

She picks up the garments here and there,
Thrown down in careless haste,
And tries to think how it would seem
If nothing were displaced.
If the house were always as still as this,
How could she bear the loneliness?

MOTHER LOVE.

The flaming red of the evening sky was paling into violet shadows. Night came upon the earth, over the little village, and the lonely house near its borders.

Dark shadows crept into the low, old-fashioned windows. They painted the whitewashed ceiling a somber black, and filled with gloom the narrow angles of a room in which an old woman sat bending over her knitting.

Not a sound was heard save the monotonous click, click of the needles, and now the whirr of the clock just before the striking of the hour.

"Eight o'clock! It is night. Before long he will be here."

A sigh relieved the breast of the gray-haired woman. She pushed aside her knitting and set the smoky little oil lamp going. This she placed near the window that the light might greet the wanderer on his home-coming, and then took up her knitting again.

Three years had gone by. It was autumn now, and the old woman sat in the self-same place near the big warm stove, waiting for the return of her only son. Yesterday he had been released from the army at the expiration of his term of service. But the night passed, and then a day and another night, and still her son came not. Almost a week went by, full of tedious waiting. One day at noon the postman rode up to the little house in the meadow.

"A letter, Mother Kathrine, a letter from your 'only one'!" he cried. He recognized the stiff, ungainly characters of the absent peasant lad.

Mother Kathrine fortified her eyes with her old horn spectacles and hobbled with her letter into the broad strip of the noonday sun that came streaming through the small window. The wrinkled hands trembled, as she broke the seal. Is he coming home at last? No, not yet!

On the worn-eaten bench the old woman dropped, clutching the letter which was soon soaked with the tears that rained from her poor old eyes.

No, her lad was not coming! He may never come again. He was locked up in a prison cell because he had killed a man in a drunken broil.

"Mother," he wrote, "I am innocent. I don't know how it happened.' "

Yes, she knew. First a boy's rejoicing, because he was free to go home, then a spell in the tavern over the wine cup—a quarrel, insulting remarks, fierce, angry blows, a knife, and then, murder. Yes, she knew!

Three more years to wait! At the end of that time his sentence would have expired. The trembling lips never complained. The wrinkled hands resolutely wiped away the tears. Mother Kathrine arose, put on her Sunday bonnet and her friendless mien, and went to see her relations in the village.

She told them, hesitatingly at first, and then glibly enough, that Jano, her only son, had shipped as a sailor on a big man-of-war and was making a trip around the world. The relations listened to her tale with astonishment, and praised the lad's courage. Soon the whole village knew it. The women came and congratulated her, and she, simple woman, turned dissembler in her old days for the love of her son.

Mother love must shield him from disgrace. The villagers must never know that Jano was a murderer. No, nor Katha, his sweetheart, who loved him and had been true to him, counting the days till his return.

In the night, when the villagers slept, Mother Kathrine sat weeping before her Bible, and prayed for Jano, her only son. Another care presented itself to the ever-thoughtful mother heart. Jano must have new clothes when he returns, and money—his savings from his long journey. And she began to save and stint to pile up a little store of silver. Like most women of her age, Mother Kathrine was fond of the sugar in her coffee, but from now on she drank it unsweetened. All day and half the night she knitted socks for a large concern in the city, and every week she carried the humble product of her industry to the store for the small, hard-earned pay. Nobody ever saw Mother Kathrine at these things, for nobody must ever know, for Jano's sake.

Thus, the time sped by. Three years—and this was the day that would bring him home. The old woman opened the cupboard and took from within a package of warm, woolen socks, a knitted kersey, a pair of new boots, and a large silk neckerchief. These things she laid out on the white pine table. From under the pillow of her bed she added a coarse linen bag, such as sailors carry, filled with clinking coin. Thirty silver dollars! The little fortune had grown apace, and

"WHAT IN GOD'S NAME DO YOU WANT HERE?"

Mother Kathrine chuckled with glee whenever she thought of her boy's surprise.

Bread and ham, sausage and butter, and a mug of cider made the old pine board look like a Christmas table. Everything was in readiness—Jano could come! On the bench by the stove she sat waiting, straining the half-deaf ears to catch the sound of his footsteps.

It came. The door opened slowly. As if stricken with palsy, the faithful old mother sat glued to her seat. The tall form of a man, stooping as he entered, stood in the moonlight that came with him through the door. Two dark eyes looked into hers out of a white set face.

The mother's arms opened wide.

"Jano!"

With a bound the man knelt at her feet and buried his head in her lap.

Jano, her only son, had returned!

* * * * *

Mother love had banished the penitentiary specter. The villagers welcomed him cordially. The lads who had grown up with him took him to the tavern, and demanded that he tell them of the strange sights he had seen during his long absence. Jano related what he had heard others say, and what he had read in books. It was like gospel truth to the young men, who had never been twenty miles away from their village. After the first days of greeting Jano hired out as a farm hand and worked untiringly. In the evening Katha, his sweetheart, came to the little house, and the three sat together and made plans for the future, when Katha and Jano would be man and wife. Soon Jano forgot the ugly past. It seemed like a dream that had nigh wearied Mother Kathrine and her son to death.

One sultry afternoon Jano came along the dusty turnpike with his rake over his shoulder. Toward him trundled the bent and ragged figure of a man. A tramp, thought Jano, then stopped suddenly, pale as death. The beggar, too, made halt, when he saw Jano.

"Halloo!" cried he, with a sneer, "my mate from No. 7. Don't you know me? Lanky Jake, your old cell-mate?"

"What in God's name do you want here?" stammered Jano.

The beggar laughed. "Picking up what I can get—don't you see?"

Jano put his hand in his pocket and took out a dollar.

"Take that," he said, "and go away. Don't go to the village, and don't tell anyone that you know me!"

The ex-convict pocketed his coin.

"Ashamed to know me, hey?"

"Not that," said Jano, with a shudder. "But they don't know here that I've been in prison. I'm leading an honest life."

"I'd like to do that myself. Have no fear, I'll not tell 'em. You were good to me in those days!"

He laughed and hobbled away. Jano stood still and looked after him till he disappeared from view.

"The storm has passed," thought Jano and hurried home.

He had scarcely turned when a good-

"WAIT OUTSIDE UNTIL WE BREAK THE NEWS TO HER."

looking young peasant, who had watched the scene between the two, emerged from behind a thicket and hastened after the tramp.

That night in the tavern over glass upon glass of fiery wine and silver coins piled up to the height of five, the handsome young farmer learned from the tramp Jano's secret. He was Jano's rival for the love of Katha, the prettiest girl in the village. The next evening Jano, as was his wont, hastened to Katha at the end of his day's labor, to bring her to his home for the chat under the apple tree, and the walk back through the blooming fields. This night Jano looked into a pale, distressed face, and eyes, frantic with fear, were riveted upon him.

"Katha!" he said. "You are crying. What troubles you?" Katha buried her face in her hands and sobbed aloud.

"Katha, tell me, your lover!" He lifted the hands from her face.

"Jano," faltered the trembling lips, "by our love, tell me, is it true, that you have not been around the world, but have been in prison the while?"

Jano was horrified. "Katha—who told you?"

The girl paid no heed to his question. "Is it true Jano?" she reiterated.

"Yes!"

From the finger of her right hand Katha took the little gold band with which she had plighted her troth to him. She threw it at his feet and left him.

"Katha!"

Jano did not rave. The blow stunned him and the loss of the girl seemed small when he thought of his mother.

"Poor mother! You have hungered, and tortured, and stinted yourself for nothing. To-morrow everyone will yell it into your face that your son is an ex-convict, and your old days will be filled with shame and misery. Poor mother!"

The night was unusually dark, not even the stars came out. The crickets chirruped in the corn to lighten the gloom. The splash of the river was eery and sad, and from away off there came a shrill cry of anguish.

In the dawn of the early morning a little procession wended its way toward the village. Two men carried a stretcher, over which a black cloth was thrown, outlining a human form. Behind the bier strode the miller and the justice.

"I don't know how he got into the mill pond, but when we found him he was stone dead. He must have come down with the current in the river."

"I wonder," said the justice.

"I'm sorry for the old woman," continued the miller. "To be taken from her like this, after waiting so many years for him!"

"Yes, poor old Mother Kathrine!" reiterated the justice.

They reached the little house. "Wait outside," said the justice, "till we break the news to her!"

The sun was on its upward way. The sky was aflame with red. Its reflex licked the tiny windows, swished over the white pine table, and over the face of old Mother Kathrine, who sat with folded hands in her armchair. The small white head inclined upon the breast. A sweet, peaceful smile hovered around the pale lips, only the wide-open eyes were glassy and set.

She had been spared the blow.

Did Not Hold His Peace.

I attended a mountain wedding in McDowell County in West Virginia, said a postoffice inspector. Everything went along smoothly at first. The cabin was brilliantly lighted with candles, and one of the best fiddlers in the county was present to furnish music for the dance to follow the wedding ceremony. Nothing occurred to mar the proceedings until the minister came to the point where he invited any one who had anything to say why the couple should not enter the bonds of matrimony to speak or thereafter hold his peace, when a rough mountaineer arose and said:

"Anything ter say, parson? Waal, I reckon I hev. I hev allus intended ter marry thet gal myself, an' thet feller knowed it, so he jess kept outen my way. I sent 'im word ter prepare for a lickin', an' he lef' the country, but kep' a writin' to the gal. Now, I'm here to make my word good, an' 'fore this hyar event goes any farder the taller-faced coward jess has me ter fight."

In vain the preacher tried to restore order. A ring was soon squared in the center of the room, and the men went at it. In about ten minutes the groom announced that he had enough, and the victor, taking the arm of the blushing bride, deliberately changed the groom's name in the marriage license to his own, while the vanquished lover made his escape. Everybody appeared to be satisfied, and the marriage took place as though nothing had occurred to mar the solemnity of the occasion.

Jenny Lind's Last Appearance.

"The last time Jenny Lind sang in public was on July 23, 1883, in the Spa, Malvern Hills, England, writes Mrs. Raymond Maude, daughter of the "Swedish Nightingale," in the Ladies' Home Journal. "The concert was in aid of the Railway Servants' Benevolent Fund, and indeed was a red-letter day to the country folk who came from all the country round with the modest eighteen-pence which secured them standing-room. On one of my walks, during the last sad week I helped to nurse her, I found an old woman in a remote cottage who eagerly asked for the 'good lady who was so ill up there.' Upon finding who I was she assured me that it would have been worth even more stinting and a further walk to have had such a treat in her old age as that singing."

Lived in Goat-Hair Tents.

Rupshu, a district on the north slope of the Himalayas, 15,000 feet above the sea level, and surrounded by mountains from 3,000 to 5,000 feet higher, has a permanent population of 500 persons who live in goat-hair tents all the year round. Water freezes there every night, but no snow falls on account of the dryness of the air. The people are shepherds and dress in pajamas and a long cloak, wearing an additional cloak in unusually cold weather.

Not So Slow.

Menelik's capital will soon have all the attractions of Paris. The Negus has ordered from a Meiningen artist a panorama of the defeat of the Italians.

A woman does not care how cold she is, if only she doesn't look frozen.

Breaking Colts to Harness.

Put a strong halter on the colt and tie in a double stall with steady work horse. Put on only the harness at first and let them remain thus for a day or two. Fasten a pulley (a) at top and back of stall, also one (b) at back, about two feet from ground. Arrange double trees, rope, and weight as shown in illustration. The weight should be about 300 or 400 pounds. After harnessing the colt with the old horse, attach the weight and let the colt pull at it. When taken to the field the animal will go along quietly and will make no trouble.—M. T. Bane, in Orange Judd Farmer.

FOR BREAKING THE COLT.

Care of Implements.

One of the causes of hard times is the lack of care in housing and caring for implements. Too frequently we see costly implements left unhoused from one season to the next; the plow perhaps standing in the furrow where the hired man unhitched from it last fall, or possibly turned upside down as an extra precaution; the binder standing in the corner of the field or the back yard, where in company with the cultivators, it furnishes a convenient roost for the chickens at night and a plaything for the children in the daytime. Under such circumstances lots of good big dollars are simply thrown away. The life of the implements is cut down much less than half; and yet the shiftless farmer wonders why he doesn't get ahead! Of course many other things conspire to make his lot a hard one just now—albeit he is really better off than most of his brethren in town—but a little care in this regard would save hundreds of thousands of dollars every year to the farmers of this country.—Exchange.

Shaving Wood Made Easy.

Useful for making ax handles, singletrees and for trimming wood for other purposes is a horse, similar in purpose to the harness maker's stitching horse. By the horse portrayed below, a stock can be dressed into almost any shape by means of a sharp drawing knife. The head should move slowly in the mortises and the pin in the inch hole through the upper plank and lower part of head should not be too tight, but so as to raise or lower the head for shaving light or heavy timbers easily. The bottom plank, a, is 7 feet long, 8 inches wide and 2 inches thick. Upper plank, b, is 3 feet long, 8 inches wide and 2 inches thick. The head, c, is 6 inches thick and from d to e is 8 inches long; the piece passing through the mortise is 4 by 1 inches. The hole, n, is for a pin to hold the head in place as well as to raise or lower head by means of the several pin holes at o.—Farm and Home.

FARMERS' SHAVING HORSE.

How to Tell a Horse's Age.

"The popular idea that the age of a horse can always be told by looking at his teeth," said a veterinary surgeon, "is not entirely correct. After the eighth year the horse has no more new teeth, so that the tooth method is useless for telling the age of a horse which is more than 8 years old. As soon as the set of teeth is complete, however, a wrinkle begins to appear on the upper edge of the lower eyelid, and a new wrinkle is added each year, so that to get at the age of a horse more than 8 years old you must figure the teeth plus the wrinkles."

Plowing Prevents Drought.

It will be found that while the soil is kept loose by plowing and cultivation its capacity for absorbing and holding water is much greater than where it is neglected. Thus every weed and surplus growth must be scrupulously kept down, as everything that grows is constantly drawing moisture from the soil. If we can get the upper and lower moisture in the soil to meet the battle is won. If, however, there is a dry streak of soil a foot or more below the surface, vegetation will suffer.

Wide Tires.

It has been truly said that no other single element, except ignorant road making, adds so much to the heavy burden of supporting the highways as the use of narrow tires, which cut up the roads instead of ironing them smoothly down. The horses' hoofs, of course, chop up the road somewhat, but it is a mere surface irritation compared with the deep and fatal wounds made by the narrow-tired wheels when once a rut is started.

Build a reasonably good road and equip the vehicles with wide tires, with the tread of the rear wheels different from that of the front wheels, so as not to follow in the same path, and the surface will not be rutted at all. The wheels serve as rollers, and, instead of cutting up the roads, they make them better. We tax ourselves poor to keep our highways in order, and then carefully select wagons which will undo the work as quickly as possible.

Plow Points.

Plow points are often improperly sharpened. Some blacksmiths slope the plowshare all the way to the edge, live a cultivator shovel. A point so sharpened will always give trouble, running too deep, and if the ground is very hard the point will soon round up and the plow refuse ample penetration unless the ground is rather soft. In working the steel, it is better to heat it slowly. In tempering, heat to a cherry red and dip in water. When taken out if a blue color immerse again, and that will toughen it. If the plow is rusty, it is a good plan to oil the share often with kerosene. In painting iron work, an excellent paint is made of graphite mixed with linseed oil. The color is black, the paint sticks well and forms a fine coating for tin roofs. Farmers should paint the sheet-iron work on their binders and other machinery.

A Shady Chicken Coop.

Shelter at night, and shade for the heat of the day, are both provided for in the coop shown in the accompanying cut, reproduced from the American Agriculturist. A barrel, with a bit of the head left in, is placed upon its side and partly filled with dry loam. Above is stretched a square of cheap cotton cloth, as shown in the sketch. If the hen is to be kept from running with the chicks, she can be tied to the stake in front, or slats can be nailed across the front of the barrel. A square frame, covered with coarse wire cloth, makes an excellent protection for the front at night, as it keeps out the enemies of the chicks, but lets in pure air. It is for lack of proper ventilation that many broods fail to grow thriftily. Remove the surface of the loam in the barrel occasionally and put in a coating of fresh earth.

GOOD CHICKEN COOP.

Kaffir Corn for Swine.

Kaffir corn for swine should be fed in connection with other foods. The Kansas experiment station ground and soaked over night red Kaffir corn and fed it to a lot of four hogs from November 7 to January 23, but gains in flesh were so light it seemed impossible to fatten the hogs, so a feed consisting of red Kaffir corn two-thirds and shorts one-third was fed with greatly improved results. A mixture of two-thirds corn meal and one-third soy bean meal has given better results than Kaffir corn and soy bean meal. Red Kaffir corn meal is not as good a feed for hogs as corn meal, but when either Kaffir corn or corn meal is mixed with soy bean meal the results are highly satisfactory.

Hints.

Bounce the lazy hired man.

Economize labor on the farm.

Kill the hens that lay no eggs

Push every acre for all it is worth.

Don't monkey with the board of trade.

Keep an account with each field on the farm.

The direct shipment of grain to cities as a rule does not pay.

Don't get swindled by slick-tongued impostors from the city.

Clover improves the soil and makes the best "hay" in the world.

No soil was ever so rich that it could not profitably utilize the manure made on the farm.

If you can do twice the work with a new machine than you can with your old one, buy a new one.

Patronize your home people. Sell your grain to the local buyer unless you know he is swindling you.

Cultivate a bitter enmity to every weed that grows. Try to feel toward it as a dog does toward a cat.

JOHN W. KEELEY.

Man Who Invented a Motor that Didn't Mote.

John W. Keeley has dug up his motor again, and Philadelphians smile when they are told that soon the elevated trains in New York will be operated altogether by power furnished by the inventor's wonderful mechanism. W. J. Fransioli, the general manager of the Manhattan Road, has seen Mr. Keeley's motor turn a big engine at very high speed, and is quite sure his cars can be operated by it. This is probably the fifth or sixth time that Mr. Keeley has convinced capitalists that he has discovered a wonderful secret. He began years ago in his laboratory in Philadelphia to find some way of applying his "vibration" to machinery, and every now and then a grand announcement is made that the motor is certain to mote, but thus far these announcements have never been realized. Mr. Keeley is now growing old. He is past 60, and his motor has been before the public since 1872. At least it was in that year that he announced his discovery of a new force, and the motor itself was put on public exhibition in 1874. Capitalists who saw it were so impressed with it that $100,000 was raised to enable him to proceed. Since then nearly $500,000 has been expended in experiments, but without tangible results. In 1888 Mr. Keeley was confined in jail for contempt of court for refusing to tell the secret process by which he produced many most remarkable results in the presence of experts, but up to the present time that secret is known to no one but himself. The motor which he exhibited to the New York men is no larger than a man's stovepipe hat.

JOHN W. KEELEY.

ALBERT G. PORTER.

Distinguished Hoosier Who Recently Died at Indianapolis.

Hon. Albert G. Porter, one of Indiana's distinguished sons, who had served his country faithfully in high places, passed away at Indianapolis recently.

Born at Lawrenceburg, Ind., in 1824, he graduated from Asbury University and became a lawyer in Indianapolis at 21. Within a few years he was a leader in Republican politics and held various municipal positions. Next he became Supreme Court reporter and in 1858 was sent to Congress, holding his seat two terms. Then he returned to Indianapolis and became eminent as a lawyer. After the war Gen. Benjamin Harrison was his partner for many years. In 1878 he was appointed comptroller of the treasury by President Hayes and in 1880 was elected Governor of Indiana by 7,000 plurality, although Indiana was ordinarily accounted Democratic by 14,000. He filled the office with distinction.

It was Gov. Porter who nominated Gen. Harrison for President in the Chicago convention of 1888 and one of

ALBERT G. PORTER.

President Harrison's first acts was to appoint his learned friend minister to Italy. Since his return in 1893 he had lived in retirement.

The Left Ear the Best.

It has been ascertained by experiments that a number of persons who use the telephone habitually hear better with the left ear than with the right. The common practice of the telephone companies is to place the receiver so that it will be applied to the left ear. In order to educate the right ear to the same point of efficiency it is recommended that the receiver be held in the right hand half of the time.

A Prize in Either Case.

"I'm sure," said the girl that is engaged, "that Herbert is a prize."

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne; "but in a case of this kind it's so difficult to tell whether you've won a first prize or a booby prize."

Fiction Unpopular in Japan.

The Japanese do not take to fiction. Of 27,000 books published in the Mikado's empire last year, only 462 belonged to that class. Works on philosophy, the arts and science, and religion stood the highest in the list.

A girl is as certain to sow her affection as a young man is to sow his wild oats.

Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, met at the above stated time, pursuant to adjournment.

Present: Supervisors Shaw, Eldred Stewart, Fitzgerald and Chairman A. C. Freeman, presiding.

Minutes of preceding meeting read and approved.

Claim of Mrs. Lewis for Hospital contract allowed on Hospital Fund in the sum of $427 50.

In the Matter of the Issuance of Bonds of Station School District, Inyo County, State of California.

Whereas, it appears to this Board that the Board of Trustees of Station School District, in this county, did, as authorized by law, call an election and submit to the electors of said district whether bonds of said district should be issued and sold for the purpose of raising money for purchasing school lots and building one or more school houses in said district furnishing the same.

Whereas, it appears that such election was called by posting notices, signed by said Board of Trustees, in three of the most public places in said district, for more than twenty days before said election, and by publishing notice in the Inyo Register, a weekly newspaper printed and published in said Inyo county, not less than once a week for three successive weeks before the holding of said election;

Whereas, it appears that such notice did contain, 1st, the time and place of holding such election; 2nd, the name of three judges to hold said election, 3rd, the hours during the day (not less than five) in which the polls would be open, 4th, the amount and denomination of the bonds, the rate of interest, and the number of years (not exceeding ten) the whole or any part of said bonds were to run;

Whereas, it has been proved by competent evidence to the satisfaction of this Board that such election was duly held and conducted in all respects according to law;

Whereas, it appears that said Board of Trustees of said Station School District have certified to this Board all proceedings had in the matter of the issuance of such bonds as required by section 1534 of the Political Code of California;

Whereas, it appears to this Board and this Board hereby finds and declares that more than two-thirds of the votes cast at said election was in favor of issuing such bonds, and that said Board of Trustees met and canvassed said returns, and caused an entry of that fact and the votes cast to be made upon its minutes, and whereas, it further appears that the whole amount of bonds so voted does not exceed five per cent of the taxable property of the district, as shown by the last equalized assessment roll of this county;

Now, therefore, on motion of Supervisor Shaw, seconded by Supervisor Eldred, it is by this Board hereby ordered: That the bonds of said Station School District, in the County of Inyo, State of California, do issue to the number of five of the denomination of Three Hundred Dollars each, aggregating the sum of Fifteen Hundred Dollars. All of said bonds are hereby declared to be payable in gold coin of the United States of America, with interest thereon in like gold coin at the rate of seven per cent per annum from date until paid. The interest on said bonds to be paid on the 20th day of December of each and every year, the principal and interest of said bonds to be paid out of the Bond Fund of said Station School District, the money therefor to be raised upon the taxable property of said district. The principal of this issue shall mature as follows, to-wit: One bond of $300, maturing December 20th, 1902, and one bond of $300 annually thereafter until all shall be paid.

The form of said bond shall be as follows, to wit:

United States of America
State of California.

Bond of Station School District, in Inyo County, State of California. Station School District.

Station School District, in the County of Inyo, State of California, hereby acknowledges itself indebted, and hereby promises to pay to ——— or to the holder of this bond the sum of three hundred dollars, which sum the said school district promises to pay to the holder hereof at the office of the Treasurer of said county in the town of Independence, in said county, on the 20th day of December, 190—, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent, per annum, payable annually on the 20th day of December of each and every year from and after the date hereof, at the office of the Treasurer aforesaid on the presentation and surrender of annual coupons of interest warrants, both principal and interest, payable in gold coin of the United States, and this bond is finally and fully paid. This bond is one of a series of five bonds of like tenor and date, each numbered respectively from one to five inclusive, amounting in the aggregate to fifteen hundred dollars. This bond is issued by the Board of Supervisors of said Inyo County under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 1530, 1531, 1532, 1533, 1534, 1535, 1536, 1537 and 1538 of the Political Code of the State of California; and the issuance hereof was authorized by more than two-thirds of the votes cast by the electors of said school district, voting at an election held therein on the 27th day of March, 1897, which said election was held to determine whether bonds of said school district should be issued and sold for the purpose of raising money for purchasing school lots and for building or purchasing one or more school houses in said school district and furnishing the same. It is hereby declared that said election was duly called, duly held and conducted and the notice thereof duly given and the result thereof canvassed and declared in accordance with the provisions of the sections of the Political Code above mentioned and that all the proceedings of the Board of Trustees of said Station School District, and of the Board of Supervisors of said Inyo County in the matter of the issuance of this bond were regular and in strict accordance with the provisions of the sections of Political Code above mentioned.

This bond is in the form prescribed by order of said Board of Supervisors, duly made and entered in its minutes on the 10th day of July 1897, and shall be payable out of the bond fund of said Station School District, and the money for the reception of said bond and the payment of the interest thereon shall be raised by taxation upon the taxable property in said district.

In witness whereof, the said Board of Supervisors has caused this bond to be signed by its Chairman and attested by its Clerk with the seal of said Board affixed, this ——— day of ——— 190—.

Attest:

———
Clerk of Board of Supervisors

———
Chairman of Board of Supervisors

———
County Auditor.

To each of said bonds shall be attached interest coupons which said coupons shall be in the following form, to-wit:

Practical Christianity.

There are thousands of neglected, poorly nourished, sorrowful little souls in the city of San Francisco to whom a fortnight in the country would be a veritable foretaste of heaven. Thanks to the Chronicle and the generous citizens of San Francisco, the Outing Fund is meeting our present needs for transportation, so that the only thing now lacking to make this undertaking a most beneficent and far-reaching philanthropy is a sufficient number of invitations from kind-hearted friends outside of this city, who may be willing, without financial return, to share their pleasant homes and big yards with these less fortunate visitors for a few weeks. Where in this wide world is there a service attended by physical, moral or spiritual benefits so grand or so permanent? Two weeks of heaven for a girl or boy, unless some counter-influence is put to work in her life, will in a few years more step over the threshold of that door which leads to death! Two weeks of glorious destiny forming on the manly side for a boy, whose only ideals have been gathered from the slums! Think of it—a chance to turn the current of a whole life from poverty, degradation, vice, to honesty, purity, good citizenship, happiness! The beneficial effect of such an outing upon poor city children is beyond computation.

I believe profoundly that our social and labor problems will be largely solved when we can turn the tide of population away from our cities back to the green fields. Our hard times would cease, in this State, if every poor man could be put upon ten acres of California's rich soil—an abundance of which awaits every comer.

A glimpse of nature, a whiff of the woods, a mouthful of the new mown hay, a drink of warm milk fresh from the cow, and these wise little travelers will, upon their return to their crowded city surroundings, give their parents no peace until the cobblestones are parted with forever and the sweet, soft earth welcomes the family of a new husbandman.

It is little enough that any of us can do toward the betterment of human conditions; but here is something—a service full of the grandest possibilities in which many of us may have a blessed part—if we will. With the money provided, the children so numerous that it only requires the selection of the neediest, there remains, in order to a successful administration of this charity, only the open home with its open hearts.

In the name of suffering city childhood, in the name of our fair commonwealth's future, will you not send for one, or more, little "summer boarder," so that for once in their lives these unblessed children of the street may spend a sweet holiday amidst happy surroundings and may fill their little stomachs three times a day with wholesome food. It is not necessary to state that no child will be sent from whom it is possible to contract any disease, and special attention is paid to cleanliness.

The fund pays all transportation expenses. All you need to do in order to have a part in this sweet charity is to tell us how many children you can "home" for two or more weeks, the sex and age you prefer, and when and where you will meet them at the train.

LOYAL L. WIRT,
Manager Chronicle Fresh Air Fund.
Y.M.C.A. Bldg., San Francisco.

Manager Wirt visited our town a few weeks ago, and A. W. Eibeshutz and O. I. Mairs offered to take in two little ones for a couple of weeks. Instead of sending two children for a couple of weeks the manager deemed it wiser to send one child for a month, the time to be divided between the two places. Thanks to these gentlemen, a child of the poverty district will taste the sweets of country life during the next month. Any of our people who are so situated as to receive one of these children into their homes may treat it to a bit of sweet air and sunshine and something to remember in after years as a glimpse of heaven.

"Last summer one of our grandchildren was sick with a severe bowel trouble," says Mrs. E. G. Gregory of Fredericksburg, Mo. "Our doctor's remedy had failed; then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which gave very speedy relief." For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Bryan on Silver

In one of his speeches at Los Angeles W. J. Bryan spoke as follows: "I can never stand before a mass of American citizens without feeling that I should impress upon them their responsibilities as citizens; to impress on them their duties and the part they should play in government. Whatever arouses study is beneficial, for it makes possible a true understanding of any subject. I would prefer to have one on my side who knows why he agrees with me, than one who agrees, but does not know why. Thinking makes it possible to arrive at some conclusion, but he who never thinks cannot arrive at anything. So I feel that while in the last campaign we lost and did not gain as we had hoped, we did arouse the masses to study economic problems in their relation to governmental principles. To maintain our convictions we must fight for them; but let us do so with charity for the convictions of others, remembering that we are all fallible. Truth grows not in seclusion but in the open field, and we should be willing to search for it and find it out wherever it may be." In another address in the same city, Mr. Bryan said: "Is there any way in which we can reach a correct opinion on the money question? I believe there is. There is one principle we are going to apply because it is deep-rooted in our system. That principle is that all men are created equal. The financial system is best that deals most justly between man and man. . . . Bimetallism means giving to these two metals a value that will make them equal at the mint, and equal in all legal tender qualities, equal in the payment of all debts; it does not mean that a silver dollar is to be redeemable by a gold dollar, or that a gold dollar is to be redeemable in silver, but that silver shall stand by the side of gold, and with gold uphold the commerce of the country. Have we not a right to make the law? Silver was struck down by the law, as it was used to assassinate that metal. We have just as much right to increase the currency by law and bring back prosperity as they had to decrease the currency and drive prosperity into the banks and into the vaults of the money changers."

Reasons Why Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is the best.

1. Because it affords almost instant relief in case of pain in the stomach, colic and cholera morbus.

2. Because it is the only remedy that never fails in the most severe cases of dysentery and diarrhoea.

4. Because it is the only remedy that will prevent bilious colic.

5. Because it is the only remedy that will cure epidemical dysentery.

6. Because it is the only remedy that can always be depended on in cases of cholera infantum.

7. Because it is the most prompt and most reliable medicine in use for bowel complaints.

8. Because it produces no bad results.

9. Because it is pleasant and safe to take.

10. Because it has saved the lives of more people than any other medicine in the world.

Barney Barnato's Good Fortune.

It is better to be born lucky than rich. When Mr. Barnato was at Johannesburg, he determined to go to the races. "You'll only lose your money," said his friends warningly. "Well, I won't take any with me," he replied, "And then I shall be all right."

Arrived at the race course, he saw a man with a peanut and fruit stall and asked him what he'd take for it.

"Two hundred pounds," was the reply.

"Done with you," said Barnato.

"Well, where's the money?" asked the man as Barnato was proceeding to appropriate the stall.

"Oh, I'm Mr. Barnato. It'll be all right."

"Well, that's good enough for me."

Within an hour Barnato had sold the contents of the stall for £600. He paid the man his £200, staked the balance on the races and won £12,000 before the end of the day.

Perhaps it is not generally known now how Mr. Barnato came to be married. The beginnings of his fortune are said to have been due to the prudent purchase of diamonds in South Africa. These he deposited for safety with a certain barmaid in Kimberley. After a time he said to her: "Give me my diamonds. I'm off to Europe. When I return, we'll be married."

"I think we'll be married first," she replied, and those were the only terms on which he could get back his diamonds. Now this astute young lady is the present Mrs. Barnato, and her baby drives along the King's road at Brighton in a silver perambulator.—London Figaro.

His Irrelevant Question.

She had just returned from a visit to Milwaukee, and something had happened to displease her.

"The fact of the matter is," she said, "we get swindled in this town and haven't sense enough to know it."

"You must have run across a bargain somewhere," he suggested, for he knew her failing.

"Bargains!" she exclaimed. "Why, I tell you, William, we don't know where to shop to make money. Do you remember that last white shirt I bought you?"

He did. He would have said he did even if he didn't, but it so happened this time that he did, for it had given him considerable trouble in one way and another.

"Well," she exclaimed, "I paid just $1 for that shirt in Chicago, and I saw an exact duplicate of it at a marked down sale in Milwaukee for 98 cents."

"Why didn't you go on to St. Paul?" he asked wearily. "Perhaps you could have got the same thing for 94, or Winnipeg might have given it to you for 91. One has to go after bargains, you know."

She wasn't quite sure whether he was making fun of her, but she felt that it was possible and refused to continue the subject in consequence.—Chicago Post.

The Forth bridge, in Scotland, is constantly being repainted. So vast is the structure that it takes 50 tons of paint to give it one coat, and the area dealt with is something like 120 acres.

Scrofula

Is a deep-seated blood disease which all the mineral mixtures in the world cannot cure. S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) is a real blood remedy for blood diseases and has no equal.

Mrs. Y. T. Buck, of Delaney, Ark., had Scrofula for twenty-five years and most of the time was under the care of the doctors who could not relieve her. A specialist said he could cure her, but he filled her with arsenic and potash which almost ruined her constitution. She then took nearly every so-called blood medicine and drank them by the wholesale, but they did not reach her trouble. Some one advised her to try S.S.S. and she very soon found that she had a real blood remedy at last. She says: "After taking one dozen bottles of S.S.S. I am perfectly well, my skin is clear and healthy and I would not be in my former condition for two thousand dollars. Instead of drying up the poison in my system, like the potash and arsenic, S.S.S. drove the disease out through the skin, and I was permanently rid of it."

A Real Blood Remedy.

S.S.S. never fails to cure Scrofula, Eczema, Rheumatism Contagious Blood Poison, or any disorder of the blood. Do not rely upon a simple tonic to cure a deep-seated blood disease, but take a real blood remedy.

Too Possible.

Knicker—We had to discharge our pastor because he mispronounced a word.

Bocker—For such a trifle?

Knicker—Yes. He said the dear departed had gone to "the undiscovered country from whose burn no traveler returns."—Judge.

The Trouble with the Numbers.

"I have heard," said the pensive-looking girl, "that poets naturally speak in numbers."

"Yes," replied her father. "The trouble is that the numbers never have any dollar marks in front of them."—Washington Star.

Unselfish to the Last.

The Caller—You say he did a great deal to encourage science?

The Widow—Yes, poor soul, he was always changing doctors.—New York Tribune.

Great Scheme.

"I'm going into politics," announced Chumpley. "Got the greatest scheme on earth for meeting the revenue deficit."

"What is it, old man?"

"Have the government run the pawn shops. There'll be no disgrace in doing business with your uncle when he's your Uncle Sam."—Detroit Free Press.

A Touching Scene.

—Up-to-Date.

He Believed It.

"Do you believe that there is any relation between weather and crime?" asked Mr. Snaggs of the observant editor.

"Of course I do," replied the wise man. "As soon as a balmy day comes the spring poets resume activity."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

Sure to Take.

"I am going to do something in the literary line which will take better than Scotch dialect," remarked Mr. Trenchant Penn.

"What is it?"

"I am going to write a story in baby talk."—Harper's Bazar.

Sam Spurs—'Sh! It's in me hat! If any duffer calls "hands up" to-day I've got the drop on him.—Truth.

A Success.

Theatrical Manager (affably)—I congratulate you, old man.

Veteran Actor (gloomily)—On what?

Theatrical Manager—On the success of your benefit, of course.

Veteran Actor (doubtedly)—Was it a success?

Theatrical Manager—Certainly. It paid expenses, didn't it? And it didn't cost you a red cent!—New York Tribune.

Clever Idea.

Wife—I'm writing to ask the Browns to meet the Joneses here at dinner; and to the Joneses to meet the Browns. We owe them both, you know.

Husband—But I've heard they've just quarreled, and don't speak.

Wife—I know. They'll refuse and we needn't give a dinner party at all!—Fun.

Too Flattering.

He—What do you think of this style of collar, Miss Bonmot? Looks like a wegular ivory tower, doesn't it?

She (thoughtfully)—Y-e-s, or like a whitewashed fence around a lunatic asylum.—Comic Home Journal.

More Horrible.

"I saw a man to-day who had no hands play the piano."

"That's nothing! We've got a girl down in our flat who has no voice and who sings!"—Yonkers Statesman.

Getting Even with Her.

She—Oh, Will; that's the prettiest engagement ring I've ever had.

He—That's funny; all the other girls I've given it to said the same thing.—Yonkers Statesman.

Her Volubility.

Mabel (studying her lesson)—Papa, what is the definition of volubility?

Mabel's Father—My child, volubility is a distinguishing feature of your mother when, on account of urgent business affairs I don't happen to reach home until after 2 o'clock in the morning.—Baltimore News.

Making Him Mad.

"Say, boy, what did you kick that dog for."

"He's mad."

"No, he isn't mad, either."

"Well, if any one should kick me I'd be mad."—Truth.

Unkind Praise.

Young Playwright—And what did you think of my climax?

Critic—It was very welcome.—Brooklyn Life.

A Ticklish Subject.

"Why don't you get a new suit, man?"

"Faith, I'm the most ticklish man in all Cork; divel a tailor in the place can get the tape round me!"—The Sketch.

Love at First Sight.

Friend—So yours was a case of love at first sight?

Mrs. Lovejoy—Yes, indeed. I fell desperately in love with my dear husband the moment I set eyes upon him. I remember it all distinctly as if it were yesterday. I was walking with papa on the promenade at Brighton, when suddenly papa stopped and, pointing him out, said: "There, my dear, is a man worth £50,000."—Tid-Bits.

A Confused Recollection.

"Yes," said Mr. Cumrox, "my youngest daughter will be through school in a short time. She is already making her preparations for commencement day."

"What are they?"

"I don't know that I followed her description very intelligently, but my impression is that they have something to do with the immortality of genius in plain white and the neck filled in with chiffon."—Washington Star.

Understood Her.

She—That little fool, Johnnie Moore, has proposed to me.

Her Dearest Friend—When will the wedding take place?—Brooklyn Life.

Where the Trouble Came In.

Spykes—Do you have any trouble meeting your creditors?

Spokes—Not at all. I find my trouble in getting rid of them.—Detroit Free Press.

Quite Different.

Singly—Who is this man Cleverly whose divorce suit is causing such a sensation?

Margaret—Oh, why, he's the author of that charming novel, "A Happy Marriage."—New York Tribune.

A Question of Harmony.

Mrs. Park Avenue—Don't you think this dress is very becoming to my complexion?

Mr. Park Avenue—Yes, the dress harmonizes much better with your to-day's complexion than with the complexion you had on last week.—New York World.

Hard to Discover.

Minnie—Doesn't Miss Highfly look pretty in her bathing suit?

Mr. Eyelette (looking intently)—Is she wearing it now?

A Thoughtful Girl.

"Harry, you had better sit part of the evening on my right side and part of it on my left side."

"Cupid's ghost—what's that for?"

"I don't want people to be saying that you got curvature of the spine on my account."—Detroit Free Press.

Too Bad.

Lucy—Clara's honeymoon was completely spoiled.

Alice—How?

Lucy—The papers containing the account of the wedding did not reach her.—Tid-Bits.

Politics and Society.

Mrs. Vogue—I expect to give my third party of the season next week; of course you'll attend?

Mrs. Shy—I would like to very much, but I can't without offending my husband. As an influential politician, you know, he is strongly opposed to third parties.—Boston Courier.

The "Chinese Vote."

The "Chinese vote" will soon be a political feature in California. In San Francisco's filthy Chinatown an infantile army has been reared. There are not less than 2,000 native sons and daughters in San Francisco's Chinatown in whose veins Chinese blood flows and who are lawful heirs of American citizenship. A small army of Mongols is marching leisurely along the dusty highway of time toward the ballot box.

Not later than the year 1920, at the present birth rate in Chinatown, and supposing average conditions regarding mortality to obtain, it is as clear as anything can be that something like 2,500 Chinese children will be entitled to the ballot in San Francisco alone. Sacramento, Stockton, Los Angeles, San Jose, and in fact nearly all communities in California have also their native-born Mongolian babies who are on their way to citizenship.

Alas, Too True!

"A prophet is not honored in his own country."

"This is also the case with some checks."—New York Tribune.

TRAINING A CHILD.

A Lesson in Courtesy that Ought to be Heeded.

Speaking of training a child, a woman writer in one of the Chicago papers says: "Does there exist a family that thinks it wrong to interrupt a child? Does there exist a family that does not think it wrong for a child to interrupt its elders? Here and there may be an idolized only child who knows what it is to tell a story to one or two sympathetic listeners without interruption, but most children in fair-sized families grow accustomed to telling their stories to a half-interested audience who bid them 'cut it short' and 'hurry up,' or possibly to keep still altogether. No one hesitates to leave the room at the most interesting point or to interrupt in any manner that may seem convenient. And then the fathers of such children wonder why they cannot sit still and wait for something to eat while a column of the evening newspaper is read aloud at the supper table.

"It may be entirely plain to the adult mind that there should be two laws of conduct, one for grown-up people and one for children, and that a well-regulated child should refuse to imitate his elders except in a few particulars where imitation may be thoroughly agreeable to the imitated party; but it is far from plain to the child. He tends with all the force in his nature to do unto others as they do unto him, and while it may be the part of the regenerated to do as he would like to have others do, still this is a good deal to expect a young child, with probably no inherited aptitude in that direction. Moreover, if there be two laws of conduct for the child and the adult, it seems scarcely fair to require more of the child than of the adult. If there is to be any difference as to what constitutes right for the child and the man surely the mature person ought to have the harder rule to follow. If, therefore, it is so hard for the grown-up individual to keep from interrupting the little one, he ought not to expect that weaker one to keep from interrupting him. If what the child says is of no importance to the grown man or woman, it must be remembered that what they say is equally of no importance to the child. If they cannot possess their souls in patience until he says his little say, by what right do they expect him to be patient while they speak? Any child, unless unusually timid and brow-beaten, will continue to interrupt just as long as he is interrupted without intending the least harm."

A WONDERFUL CHANGE.

What the South Is Now and What It Was Twenty Years Ago.

Where the proud city of Birmingham stands to-day there were in 1877 only worn-out fields. Chattanooga was a dilapidated village, Atlanta still sat in the ashes of the war. Florida was almost as much of a wilderness as in the days of Spanish rule. Texas had made no impression upon the world's markets as a cotton producer. The States of Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas were in poverty and despair because of the miseries of the reconstruction period. The coal and iron mines of Tennessee, Alabama and Virginia were practically undiscovered and unopened. There was no serious competition by any southern port with New York and Boston for the export and import trade. With a single exception there was not one great railroad system in the South, and that did not touch the southeastern part.

Twenty years ago the manufacture of cotton in the South was wholly an infant industry, and cities now known as textile working centers were mere trading posts at the cross roads. The fruit and vegetable business of Florida was so small as to attract little attention, while the fruit and melon business of Georgia did not exist at all. Southern farmers then bought their corn and meats, instead of raising them as they do now, and the cotton crop of Georgia, notwithstanding the comparatively low prices, and notwithstanding the cities have absorbed so much of the rural population, is twice as large as it was then.

Jenny Lind's Precocity.

"Jenny Lind could not have been more than 4 years old when she woke up the old spinet in the attic to repeat under her tiny fingers a fanfare that a band used to play in passing her home. This was the first music that broke upon her tiny ears," records Mrs. Raymond Maude, her daughter, who writes of "My Mother as I Recall Her," in the Ladies' Home Journal. "There is also a cat story," continues Mrs. Maude, "her voice having been noticed as singing to her cat, but I won't give any credit to that, and will pass on to her ninth year, when the director of the theater and opera school at Stockholm was induced to hear her, and to accept her as a pupil. At this school she also learned deportment and gesture, in which she was always perfect, and which, all her life, made her bearing and carriage so stately as to give her the appearance of a tall woman, when she really was not more than five feet six. She was also a beautiful dancer, and loved dancing, though seldom indulging in it—refraining for her health's and art's sake, as she used to say, since it tired her too much."

Mrs. Maude notes that Jenny Lind's first teacher was Croelius, and also that Garcia, one of her earliest instructors in the technical art of singing, is still living—in London. Jenny Lind began making her professional tours at an age when most girls are being tendered and nurtured at home; and also coached fellow-pupils less gifted than herself, thereby gaining knowledge and experience. Her first "full-grown appearance was made March 7, 1837, when she was between 16 and 17; forty-six years later she sang for the last time in public.

A Mistake.

"Of course," said the jeweler, "you meant well, but don't do that again."

"What do you mean?" inquired the man in charge of the repair department.

"You charged that last man so much that instead of having his old watch fixed he bought a new one that I had marked down to cost as an advertisement."—Washington Star.

There are two occasions when women count their own fingers: one of them is when they hear that a widower is to be married.

The biography of Prof. Jowett may be looked for on an early date.

Bret Harte's story, "The Three Partners," is not to appear as a book until the autumn.

Experts have estimated that at least $1,000,000 will be obtained for Lord Ashburnham's library to be sold soon in London.

"Flames" is the title of Robert Hichen's new novel, which is to be issued shortly. It is a story of modern London life, but the plot has largely to do with esoteric science and occult forces.

We have heard a good deal of Maeterlinck in recent days, and so interest will attach to a volume by him now being translated into English. It is "The Treasure of the Humble," a work which consists of ten essays in "morality and literature."

As everybody knows, Thomas Hardy has been revising and enlarging his story, "The Pursuit of the Well-Beloved." That was the title when it appeared in serial form, but as a book it will simply be called "The Well-Beloved." The other point to mention is that the volume is now being printed, and will be ready within a week or two. Mr. Hardy's scene here is that "rocky coigne of England" called the Isle of Portland.

Richard Harding Davis tells the following anecdote: "I once heard an American tourist say to a British workman outside of St. James' palace on a levee day, 'And I suppose you pay taxes to support this?' The workman said: 'Yes, it costs me about sixpence a year. Isn't it worth the money?' And the American, becoming suddenly conscious of the fact that he had been standing for two hours watching the show of royalty and that it had not cost him even sixpence, was honest enough to own that it was."

Kept His Promise.

Much is said in these days about the want of obedience to parental authority, displayed by the rising generation, but an incident in which the contrary spirit was manifested is narrated by a prominent Western lawyer.

His 12-year-old son, a boy of great spirit but with no overabundance of strength, went to pass a vacation with a cousin who lived on the banks of a broad river. His father, in his parting instructions, placed one restriction upon the boy's amusements during his visit.

"I don't want you to go out in your cousin's canoe," he said, firmly. "They are used to the water, but you are not, and you haven't learned to sit still anywhere, as yet. You'll be there only a week, and with all the other amusements the boys have, and the horses and dogs, you can afford to let the canoe alone for this time, and keep your mother from worrying all the while you're away."

The boy readily gave the desired promise. On his return he was enthusiastic over the pleasures he had enjoyed.

"And I didn't mind canoeing a bit, pa," he said, addressing his careful parent with a beaming smile. "The boys taught me how to swim, and the only time they used the canoe was the last day to go over to the other shore. But I remembered my promise, and I wasn't going to break the last day. So I swam across!"

A Railroad Above the Clouds.

There are several places in the world where the iron horse actually climbs up mountain sides to spots which are situated far above the clouds. In Peru they have built a railway over one of the most elevated ribs of the Andes, and in Switzerland the steam engine snorts and puffs around and up the sides of peaks where it was formerly considered hazardous for a sure-footed Alpine climber to attempt to worm his way.

The engineers of the United States have been equally as enterprising as those of Europe and the Spanish republics of South America. They have proven that there is no mountain too broad to be tunneled or too high for them to send a locomotive to the summit. The plateau on the top of Pike's Peak was once thought to be almost as inaccessible to human beings as are the canals of Mars to mundane navigators. To-day all is changed. Since 1891 the locomotive has made its regular trips up the sides of the "Pride of the Rockies," seemingly doing it with as much ease as the "regular" makes the journey from the Union station at Kirkwood.

At one time the Pike's Peak "cog" was the most elevated railroad in the world, its upper terminus being at a spot 14,147 feet above the beach line at Galveston, Texas. Since the Peruvian railway, mentioned above, was built, the Pike's Peak "elevated" takes a back seat. It is still a wonder in engineering, however, being nine miles long (high), and having several grades of 25 per cent. The engines used on this queer railroad weigh forty tons.

Open Sand Molding.

Iron founders who know the waste of time in preparing beds for open sand molding will appreciate the suggestion of an expert founder that a permanent bed should be made of such dimensions as to take in any work likely to be wasted, and that, if very large, it should be provided with a cinder bed, which should be low enough—at least fifteen inches from surface—to permit of long dabbers that are often required in loam plates. The straight edges should be made of flat bars of wrought iron with the upper edges planed.

DISHONORED DRAFTS.

When the stomach dishonors the drafts made upon it by the rest of the system, it is necessarily because its fund of strength is very low. Honored with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, it soon begins to pay out vigor in the shape of pure, rich blood, containing the elements of muscle, bone and brain. As a sequence of the new vigor afforded the stomach, the bowels perform their functions regularly, and the liver works like clock work. Malaria has no effect upon a system thus reinforced.

CHEAP IRRIGATION.

The Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, Cal., the largest builders of gas, gasoline and oil engines on the Coast, are making extensive preparations for the season's business.

They are filling several orders for large irrigating plants and as this line of their business increases each season, it is safe to say the farmers throughout the State are appreciating the advantages of irrigation with water pumped by this cheap power.

The Hercules Works are at present building an 80 H. P. engine for Geo. F. Packer, Colusa, which will raise 6000 gallons per minute from the river and distribute it over his land. This will be the largest gasoline pumping plant in existence.

A THOUGHT THAT KILLED A MAN!

He thought that he could trifle with disease. He was run down in health, felt tired and worn out, complained of dizziness, biliousness, backaches and headaches. His liver and kidneys were out of order. He thought to get well by dosing himself with cheap remedies. And then came the ending. He fell a victim to Bright's disease! The money he ought to have invested in a safe, reliable remedy went for a tombstone.

Warner's Safe Cure

is the only standard remedy in the world for kidney and liver complaints. It is the only remedy which physicians universally prescribe. It is the only remedy that is backed by the testimony of thousands whom it has relieved and cured.

THERE IS NOTHING ELSE THAT CAN TAKE ITS PLACE

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

A HOUSEHOLD PRAYER.

From a rusty needle, a pointless pin,
A button minus an eye,
A torn-out, worn-out buttonhole,
Both now and by-and-by;
From a rotten string, or shoe-lace weak,
Collars that button hard,
Neckties that turn "bind-side before"
Without the least regard.
Good Lord, deliver us.

From a shiftless, thriftless wife,
A mother who doesn't care
Whether she tidily wears her gowns,
Or rarely combs her hair;
From a husband who doesn't see or know
How dirt tracks up the floor,
A father who thinks it foolishness
For the little ones to snore,
Good Lord, deliver us.

From a lazy man, a heedless woman,
A thoughtless boy or girl,
Who turn the world half upside down
With a whirr, a whisk, a whirl;
From such as these and many more,
As we go on our way,
That we may graciously be free
Forever, "Let Us Pray,"
Good Lord, deliver us.
—Good Housekeeping.

SIXES AND SEVENS.

"My last day at Oxford," sighed Mrs. Romer as she lay back in the punt and put up her parasol. "Isn't it a shame, Mr. Elsworth, that I have to go away on the first day of the 'eights'?"

Elsworth of Exeter, having moored the punt carefully, turned and sat down opposite Mrs. Romer, nursing his knees.

"Beastly shame," he said, with gloom in his voice. "But must you go?"

"Positively must," replied Mrs. Romer, shifting her parasol and looking at her companion round the edge. "We've got to go to a dinner party tomorrow night in town and a theater and dance the next night, and—O—something or other every night till the end of the season. But you're coming to see us in town, aren't you? You promised, you know."

Elsworth dug his heel into the floor of the punt. "You won't have any time to spare for me in town—like up here, you know," he said, gloomily. Then, more cheerfully: "We've seen a lot of each other the last week, haven't we? Seems as though we'd known each other for—for any amount of time."

Mrs. Romer shifted her parasol again in order to watch an eight paddling down to the starting point at Iffley.

"They look such nice, clean, wholesome boys," she said. "That's what I like so about Oxford. All the boys look as though—well—as though they had a bath every morning. What boat is that?"

"O, that's the House—Christ Church, I mean. But let's——"

"And who is that at the end of the boat?"

"That's Barclay; he's stroke, you know; awful outsider."

"He looks nice," said Mrs. Romer, following the boat with her eyes.

"But, I say," said Elsworth, "can't you cut the dinner party and stay on? We could have such an awfully good time."

Mrs. Romer turned her eyes to Elsworth and shook her head. "I'm to be carried off by main force to-night," she said. "You see, my husband is coming on from Birmingham this afternoon to pick me up, and we positively must go to town by the last train."

Mrs. Romer leaned back on her cushions and sighed. "But you're not smoking, Mr. Elsworth?" she said; "I don't mind your smoking, you know."

"I don't want to smoke," said Elsworth. "I say," he continued, after a pause, "we've had a ripping good time this last week, haven't we?"

"I've enjoyed myself immensely," said Mrs. Romer. "Everybody has been so kind. The Pethwicks are charming people, and let one do just as one likes, and——"

"Yes," said Elsworth, "I shall always be grateful to the Pethwicks."

"And you have simply devoted yourself to me—an old married woman like me, too!"

"What rot!" said Elsworth. "Why, I don't believe you're more than—than a year or two older than I am."

"Ah, but I am," Mrs. Romer sighed, shifting her parasol again, and turned towards the river. "Wasn't that the gun?" she asked. "Does that mean that the race is starting?"

"No; that's only the first gun," said Elsworth. "But never mind the race; let's talk about—I mean—I want to tell you——"

"Don't be silly," said Mrs. Romer, sitting up and looking with great interest down the course. "Of course, I mind about the race. That's just what I've come to see."

"I believe you are offended with me," said Elsworth, gloomily. "I suppose I deserve it. I'd have begged your pardon last night only I thought you didn't seem to mind, you know."

"Mind!" said Mrs. Romer, turning towards Elsworth; "mind what? I thought you were particularly nice last night."

"Then, you wern't offended—really?"

"Why should I be offended?"

"At what—what I did."

"Why, Mr. Elsworth, what did you do?"

Elsworth turned a puzzled face to Mrs. Romer for a moment. Then, picking a bit of fluff carefully from the knee of his flannels, "I mean," he said, "I mean when I kissed you."

"O!" said Mrs. Romer.

"I'm awfully sorry if it annoyed you, but I did."

Elsworth looked up boldly at Mrs. Romer, whose eyes wandered vaguely round the horizon. Her eyebrows lifted.

"I don't remember," she said.

"Don't you remember," pursued Elsworth, "when we were standing last night—after supper at Brandon's—looking into the gardens? I was just behind you—quite close—and——"

"Yes?" said Mrs. Romer, quite gently, as her eyes came to rest upon Elsworth's face, which was still bent on the knee of his flannels.

"Well, I couldn't help it, you know. But you did know, didn't you?"

"I did not," said Mrs. Romer. "I hadn't the least idea. And I can't understand——"

"I'm awfully sorry—really," said Elsworth.

Mrs. Romer watched him in silence for a few moments as he plucked at the knee of his flannels. Then her brow wrinkled a little. "Why are you so sorry?" she asked.

"Because I'm sure you are angry; now aren't you?"

Mrs. Romer reflected, rubbing the handle of her parasol gently against her cheek.

"Well, you see," she said, after a pause, "after all, I didn't know."

"But supposing you had known," said Elsworth, looking suddenly up at her.

"It would never have hapened," said Mrs. Romer, firmly.

There was silence for a few moments, Elsworth looking moodily across the river to the towing path, where the townsfolk stood to view the races, and undergraduates were hurrying down to run with the boats. Mrs. Romer looked reflectively at Elsworth.

"I don't think it was very nice of you, Mr. Elsworth," she said, "to do—to do that sort of thing without my knowing it. Why did you do it?"

"There didn't seem to be any—any other way," replied Elsworth. Then, meeting Mrs. Romer's eyes, he said: "But you needn't laugh at a man. It's rough."

"I'm not laughing," said Mrs. Romer. "I'm very much annoyed."

"But you said you weren't angry," said Elsworth.

"You haven't told me why you did it," said Mrs. Romer. "And there's another gun. That's the start, isn't it?"

"I couldn't help it," said Elsworth. "Don't you see, when a man sees you every day—talks to you—and—and all that, doesn't it stand to reason, Vi—I may call you Violet?"

"Certainly not," said Mrs. Romer; "why, I'm old enough to be your mother—very nearly."

"O, rot!" said Elsworth, "you look awfully young and—and jolly."

Mrs. Romer shook her head.

"I put my complexion on every morning," she said.

"I don't believe it," said Elsworth.

"And I dye my hair," continued Mrs. Romer.

"I don't care," said Elsworth.

"And I—I'm married," said Mrs. Romer.

Elsworth returned to the obdurate bit of fluff on his knee.

"I suppose," he said, slowly, "that does matter." Elsworth looked up straight into Mrs. Romer's eyes. "You are laughing," he protested. "It's beastly rough on a chap."

The shouts of the spectators on the banks, on the barges, and in the boats grew in volume; a bell clanged—the signal from the bank that a boat was within bumping distance of another. Excited men tore along the towing-path with rattles, and shouted the names of their colleges in encouragement as the eights came up the course. But Elsworth heard none of these things. He heard only the laughter that bubbled from the lips of Mrs. Romer.

"O, you absurd boy!" she said. "There! Exeter has made a bump, and you haven't even cheered!"

"I wasn't thinking of the races," said Elsworth. "A man doesn't think of things like that when he's——"

"We ought to be getting back," said Mrs. Romer, as she watched the eights paddling back from the winning-post to their respective barges.

Elsworth unmoored the punt and began punting up-stream. After a stroke or two he stopped, and trailing the pole in the water behind him, said, "I suppose I mustn't come and see you—now."

"Why not?" said Mrs. Romer. "I was hoping to see a lot of you when you came up to town—or 'down,' you call it, don't you?"

"You mean it?" said Elsworth. "Because, of course, I should be—only the thought perhaps—after what has happened——"

"What has happened?"

"I mean—after last night, and—and what I've said to-day—but I couldn't help it, you know, but I thought you might find it a little awkward my meeting——"

"O! there's Dick on the barge," said Mrs. Romer. She waved a waveloping parasol, and a lifted straw hat on the Exeter barge identified Mr. Romer. Elsworth punted alongside, and was forthwith introduced to Mr. Romer.

Mrs. Romer held Elsworth's hand a moment at parting.

"You mustn't," she said, "take it too seriously—what I said."

"You mean—about—about minding?"

"No," laughed Mrs. Romer, "about my hair, and so on. Good-by. We shall see you in town."

"Good-looking boy," said Mr. Romer, as he walked up through Christ Church meadows with his wife.

"Isn't he?" said Mrs. Romer. Then, looking sideways up at her husband, she proceeded, "And O! Dick, what do you think? He's is love with me—awfully in love, poor boy."

"What, another. Really, Vi, the Public Prosecutor ought to take you up."

"And—Dick—he kissed me."

"O, Vi, come——" began Mr. Romer.

"It was such an absurd little kiss—on my back hair. I could scarcely feel it. And I couldn't laugh because—because, of course, he thought I didn't know. And now he's so miserable about it."

"But why should he be miserable," began Mr. Romer, "if he——"

"O, don't be logical, Dick. You don't mind, Dick, do you?"

"Mind," said Mr. Romer, selecting a cigar from his case. "Of course not—if he doesn't."

They walked on for a little in silence, Mr. Romer puffing at his cigar.

"Well," he said at length, "you're very serious, Vi. What are you thinking of? The silly boy?"

"Stupid old Dick," said Mrs. Romer, glancing at her husband. "I was thinking of you. You are so sensible, Dick—so horribly sensible."—The Ludgate.

How It Feels to Be Blown Up.

"One of the most exciting episodes in my life," said Gen. Dudley Avery, recently, to a New Orleans newspaper man, "was during a thunder storm a number of years ago on Avery Island, when 10,000 pounds of dynamite exploded. It was a most extraordinary happening, and the most remarkable thing of the affair was that I lived to tell the tale. I was in the vicinity of the building in which the dynamite was stored, and when the storm came on I took shelter under a shed which was some distance removed from the explosion, and which was used as a blacksmith shop by a man who was employed in this capacity, and who served with me during the war, and at the battle of Shiloh. We were chatting together when I felt a shock, and then, to my surprise, I saw the blacksmith going up in the air. I watched him pass through the roof of the shed, but the man, who, by the way, was an Irishman, did not seem to get any further from me. Then I realized that I was going up too. I suppose we must have ascended for thirty or forty feet, and then we came down with a rush, reaching the earth a little disfigured and with lungs in a state of collapse. When we caught our breath the Irishman remarked between his gasps that a little thing like that couldn't scare us, as we'd both been in explosions before. He was wounded badly, however, while I escaped with a few scratches. We found upon coming down that the lightning had exploded the 10,000 pounds of dynamite. Where the storehouse had stood there was a hole in the ground about thirty feet deep, and with a diameter of fully sixty feet, shaped like a funnel. Trees in the vicinity were burned black, and an oak tree two feet thick that had stood twenty feet from the building was torn into shreds so fine that scarcely a vestige could be found. I have been afraid to go near dynamite ever since."

Famous Spot in History.

The most important public square in Paris, and one of the handsomest in the whole world, is the Place de la Concorde. In the center rises the obelisk of Luxor, presented by the pasha of Egypt to Louis Philippe. It is flanked on either side by a large fountain. The Place de la Concorde seems somewhat wrongly called, in view of the history of the spot. One hundred and fifty years ago it was an open field. But in 1748 the city accepted the gracious permission of Louis XV. to erect a statue to him here. The place then took his name and retained it till the new regime, in 1789, melted down the statute and converted it into 2-cent pieces. On the 30th of May, 1770, during an exhibition of fireworks here, a panic took place and 1,200 people were trampled to death and 2,000 more were severely injured. The occasion was the attempt of the people to express, by a grand celebration, their unbounded joy at the recent marriage of the young dauphin with the Austrian princess Marie Antoinette. On the 21st of January, 1793, they gathered here again in immense numbers to see the head of the same dauphin, now Louis XVI., chopped off by the sharp guillotine. During the next two years the spot well earned its title "Place of the Revolution," for the guillotine did not cease its work until Marie Antoinette, Charlotte, Mme. Elizabeth (the king's sister), Robespierre, and more than 2,800 persons had perished by its deadly stroke.—Chautauquan.

Electricity and Music.

An electrical attachment for pianos has recently been patented. A current is made to flow through the strings of the instrument, a powerful magnet being the most essential part of the contrivance. When a key is struck, the corresponding string vibrates in the usual manner; but it continues to vibrate and to produce the note until the key is released. Incidentally, owing to the electrical action, the harmonics are brought out in a wonderful way. It is suggested that much might be done for acoustic effect by stringing wires over the ceiling and walls of concert halls and theaters. If properly arranged, they would respond sympathetically to the sounds of human voices or of musical instruments. The singer's notes would actually play upon a gigantic Aeolian harp, and wonderful harmonic results might be brought out. This idea, so far as known, has never been tried. There is no telling how far the harmonics might be helped by causing an electric current to flow through the wires, as in the case of the piano.

Pond Alive with Goldfish.

Ferdinand Marker, a prosperous farmer at Malvern, near Canal Dover, Ohio, has a novel feature on his land in a pond of large area which is literally alive with goldfish. Several years ago he placed two in the pond and these have multiplied until there seems to be millions of them.

REMINISCENCES OF CUSTER'S LAST FIGHT

THE most remarkable fight in the history of Indian warfare, and in some respects the history of the world, was the battle fought on the Little Big Horn River in Montana between the command of General George A. Custer and the allied forces of all the renegade Indians in the West under the leadership of Chiefs Gall and Sitting Bull, on June 25, 1876, says the Globe-Democrat. It was remarkable from the fact that not a single man in Custer's command escaped to tell the tale. Much has been said and written about this famous fight, a large part of which has been erroneous and the product of vivid imaginations. It has been so long since anything having the least semblance of truth has been published concerning this bloody affair that the recollections of a friend of Custer, who was with him until a few minutes before the battle, and who, when the command was divided, was sent with Maj. Reno, are most interesting. Dr. H. R. Porter, of St. Louis, was the only surviving surgeon of the three who were with Custer's regiment on that fateful June day. His recollections have never appeared in print, and it was only after much persuasion that he consented to talk for publication. Speaking of the expedition and its results, he says:

"Our expedition left Fort Abraham Lincoln on May 17, 1876, under the command of General Terry, and proceeded overland. The Indians had been located by General Terry's scouts, and he had told Custer to strike them on the 26th. Terry was sure that his scouts had them well located, and results demonstrated that he was correct. Generals Terry and Gibbon were to go by another route and were to strike the Indians in front and Custer was to close in on the rear. Custer started from the camp on Powder River on the morning of June 24. I was sent with him. We were on the trail all that day and night, and proceeded until 4 o'clock, the morning of the 25th, when we camped in a deep ravine where the Indians could not see us. We were not allowed to unsaddle or unpack. Being very tired after our long ride we lay down and slept, each man holding his bridle reins. In about an hour the scouts reported a large camp of Indians ahead. The command was ordered to get ready for action. Custer came to me and said: 'Porter, there is a large camp of Indians ahead, and we are going to have a great killing.' At 6 o'clock we started.

"It was Custer's purpose at this time to charge the Indians in a body, he supposing that our presence had not been discovered by them. In a short time the scouts reported that we had been seen by the Indians. Custer then decided to divide the command. He sent Col. Benteen with three companies to the left, Major Reno with three companies to the center, and he took three companies, and was to go to the right, his idea being to surround the Indian camp. Captain McDougal was left in charge of the pack train. Just as we were ready to start Custer came to me and said: 'Doctor, I would like to have you go with me, as you are younger and a better rider than Dr. Lord, the chief surgeon.' I replied: 'All right; I would much prefer going with you.' Custer then said: 'I will see Dr. Lord and ask him to consent.' We rode over to where Dr. Lord was, and Custer spoke to him about the contemplated arrangement. The doctor replied: 'Not much. I am going with you.' The poor fellow in those few words saved my life and sealed his own doom. I went with Reno. We had proceeded but a short distance when Captain Cook, Custer's adjutant, came up and said: 'The Indians are right ahead of you, and you are ordered to charge them as soon as possible.'

"We went forward at a lively gait. When we came to the river we discovered that the Indians were on the opposite bank. We forded the river and suddenly came upon ten or fifteen of the redskins, and they were running. We then thought that we had already won the fight. We rode some little distance toward the Indian camp, when suddenly a swarm of the red devils rose up and poured a terrific fire into us. We dismounted and formed a skirmish line. At first there were only a few, comparatively, then more and more of the savages appeared, and the ground seemed to be fairly alive with them. They were all naked, and their bodies were painted hideously. They all rode their ponies bareback. The fire finally became so hot that Reno ordered his men to mount and 'charge'—he called it—to the rear. A general stampede of our troops then took place. A soldier was shot in the little clump of trees where I was. I dismounted and found him mortally wounded. My horse was rearing and plunging, and I had all I could do to hold him. The Indians, in their mad pursuit of our demoralized troops, did not notice me in the timber. They were passing within ten feet of where I was. I placed laudanum on the wound of the soldier and bandaged it as best I could, and again mounted my frightened horse. As I was leaving him the poor soldier said: 'For God's sake, doctor, don't leave me to be tortured by those fiends.' Bullets were flying thick and fast, and I turned my horse loose and caught up with our troops, who had gotten a half a mile away. In that half mile ride I think that I was made the target of a thousand rifles, but I escaped without a scratch. We again forded the river and took a stand on the top of a steep hill. A few minutes later Benteen, with his three companies, came up, as did McDougal, with the pack train. Benteen, after leaving us when the command was divided, had gone west of the river. Not seeing any Indians, and hearing the firing, he rushed back and joined us. We fought there the remainder of the day, surrounded by 3,000 savages, while there were only 300 of us, all told. The men dug rifle pits with their knives and tin cups. At dark the Indians stopped firing. Some of the men then crawled down to the river, and secured water. We had been fighting in the broiling sun all day without a drop of water, and the wounded were begging for a drink.

"Next morning the Indians again opened fire on us. Although Reno was the ranking officer, Colonel Benteen was really in command, and to his coolness and bravery those of us who were saved owe our lives. With the air thick with bullets and some of them piercing his clothing, he stood calmly directing the troops. Occasionally a band of savages would dash up to within 200 or 300 yards of us, and our men would then charge them. Several Indians were killed in these charges, and finally one of the soldiers killed and scalped an Indian in plain view of the others. This frightened them, and they kept a safe distance away after that. A perfect storm of leaden hail was poured in on us all day on the 26th until about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when the firing gradually ceased. We were then frightened, as we thought the Indians were up to some bloodier mischief. Finally we saw them moving off in a body. That night most of the soldiers slept, and were much refreshed in the morning. After the Indians left we were able to procure water. We had all been nearly famished. During the morning of the 27th General Terry and his command came up. He and his staff were all crying, and Gen. Terry said: 'Custer and his whole command are killed. We thought you were, too.'

"After separating from us Custer had gone through a rough country for a distance of four or five miles and attacked the Indians in the rear. As soon as we could, several of the officers and myself went over to where Custer had fought and found that what General Terry had reported was only too true. We found Custer's body stark naked. He was shot in the head and breast. The body of Captain Tom Custer, General Custer's brother, was horribly mutilated. I cut a lock of hair from the head of each officer as he lay, and gave it to their families on my return home. The steamer Far West was moored at the mouth of the Little Big Horn. She was the supply boat of the expedition, and had made her way up the Big Horn farther than any other boat. After burying the dead we took the wounded on litters ten or twelve miles to the boat, and I was detailed to go down to Fort Lincoln with them. Colonel Smith, Terry's Adjutant General, was sent along with the official dispatches, and he had a traveling bag full of telegrams for the Bismarck office. Captain Grant Marsh, of Bismarck, was in command of the Far West, and the steamer performed a feat unequaled in Western steamboating. At 11 o'clock on the night of the 5th of July we reached Bismarck and Fort Lincoln, having made 1,000 miles in fifty-four hours. Colonel Smith and myself hurried from the landing uptown, and called up Colonel Lounsberry, the editor of the Tribune, and the telegraph operator, J. M. Carnahan, who took his seat at the key and scarcely raised himself from his chair for twenty-two hours. What he sent vibrating around the world is history."

PRINCIPALS IN THE FIGHT ON THE LITTLE BIG HORN.

QUEER WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

Some Nations Have a System that Puzzles Americans Greatly.

The word "candy" in India means 500 pounds in Madras and 529 pounds in Bombay. The word "barrel" in Spain means 100 pounds of raisins, while in Malta it is a customs phrase for eleven and four-tenths gallons. "Dun" in Japanese for one inch, and "li" is Chinese for 2,115 feet. In Germany the word "last" means two metric tons, or 4,480 pounds, while in England it stands for eighty-two and one-half bushels of dry malt. A person who said "pic" in the Argentine Republic would describe nine-tenths of a foot, and the person using the word "sho" in Japan would designate one and six-tenths of a quart. "Rottle" in Palestine means six pounds and in Syria five and one-fourth pounds. "Seer" is Indian for one pound, thirteen ounces; "salm" is Maltese for 490 pounds and "pood" is Russian for thirty-six pounds.

A "catty" in China, Japan and Java means about one and one-third pounds, while in Sumatra it indicates about two and one-eighth pounds. "Coyan" is Sarawak for three pounds and Siamese for about two and one-half pounds.

"Fanega" is a common unit of dry measure in South and Central America; it means two and one-half bushels in Chili, three and eighty-eight one hundredths bushels in Uruguay, one and one-half bushels in Venezuela, one and one-half bushels in Mexico, and about the same in Cuba. "Arroba" means thirty-two and one-third pounds in Brazil and twenty-five and one-third pounds in the Argentine Republic. "Arshine" is Russian for twenty-eight inches, and "artel" in Morocco means one and one-twelfth pounds. In Denmark and Sweden some queer names prevail, with widely different meanings, although the pund (pound) is the popular unit of weight in both countries. In Denmark "tonde" means three and ninety-four one hundredths bushels, and "tondeland" means one and thirty-six one hundredths acres. "Centner" stands for 110 pounds in Denmark and ninety-seven and seven-tenths pounds in Sweden. In the last-named country "tunna" describes four and one-half bushels and "tunneland" one and twenty-two one hundredths acres. "Mil" in Denmark means four and sixty-eight one hundredths miles. "Ru" in Japanese is one-tenth of an inch, and "to" in the same language is two pecks. "Tan" is Japanese for one-quarter of an acre.—New York Times.

Naval Tank.

The new naval experiment tank at the Washington yard, in which miniature war ships will be tested, will be 560 feet long and 50 feet across, and inside the water space will be 475 by 43 feet. Its depth will be 11 feet. Running across, close to the water, will be a carriage upon which there will be attached a dynamometer to register the resistance due to towing a model through the basin. Models, varying in size from ten to twenty feet, of every new ship to be built will be attached to this machinery and drawn through the water. The wave motion will be observed and the resistance it offers will be calculated.

For Detectives Only.

The American Hawkshaw now has a newspaper of his own. This unique addition to the list of class papers is published monthly at Indianapolis. Its news columns are given over to a bulletin of more than $15,000 in cash rewards, with a veritable rogues' gallery of pictures and descriptions of "crooks wanted," while the latest swindling schemes and methods of detection are fully explained for its crimes investigating readers.

"Frisbie is the laziest man I ever knew." "What makes you think so?" "He actually seems to be glad that he's getting baldheaded, so that he won't have to comb his hair any more."—Cleveland Leader.

"Might I ask what school of poetry you prefer?" inquired the young man who writes. And the old gentleman replied: "The homeopathic school. The smaller the dose, the better it suits me."—Washington Star.

Pease—I suppose you've learned a great deal about gardening since you've lived in the country? Hubbard—Yes; I'm picking up something all the time. This year I've given up trying to raise my own vegetables.—Puck.

"How did they stop the elopement?" asked Maud. "By a detestable piece of trickery," replied Mamie; "her father put his head out of the window and shouted that her hat was on crooked, and when she grabbed for it she upset the tandem."—Washington Star.

"Why do you do up your hair in those papers, dear?" remarked General Weyler of his wife, as she came down to breakfast in the Cuban boarding-house. "Why, that's the way you do the enemy up, is it not, dear?" replied the general's spouse.—Yonkers Statesman.

Once upon a time two Cows reclined peacefully beneath a tree. "Oh, by the way," one of the Cows remarked casually, "why was it, if I may ask, that you didn't chase those golfers yesterday?" "Oh, I don't care to be the cause of little calves being made to suffer."—Detroit Free Press.

"How long is it going to take to get through with this case?" asked the client, who was under suspicion of house-breaking. "Well," replied the young lawyer, thoughtfully, "it'll take me about two weeks to get through with it, but I'm afraid it's going to take you about four years."—Washington Star.

Browner—So you haven't a bicycle, Miss Neere? Miss Neere—No, I looked at one the other day, but there was something about it I didn't like and the man wouldn't alter it, so I didn't get it. Browner—They generally make any alterations required. What was it you wanted altered? Miss Neere—The price.—Judy.

"It seems to me that you can be depended on to say the wrong thing more than any other man that I know." "What have I done?" "Insulted the Bliggings family." "Why, I tried to compliment them." "You said that their baby, who hasn't any hair, looked exactly like its father." "Yes." "Well, Bliggins is insulted on his own account, and his wife is insulted on behalf of the baby."—Indianapolis Journal.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JULY 23.....1897

There has been another jump in the price of wheat in the East. September, in which trading was the heaviest, closed at 72¾ cents, and next morning opened at 73¾ cents. About noon there was another advance, and when 74 cents was reported as the closing price there was cheering in the Produce Exchange. It is a long time since September wheat sold at 74 cents in July. There was not so much trading in July wheat, but the market was very strong. July opening price on Thursday was 79¾ cents, and the closing price 80 cents, and many bids were sent out to holders of wheat in all parts of the country for July wheat to be delivered immediately; 600 bids being sent out by one firm alone. As high as 79¾ cents was offered for immediate delivery, but by 5 p. m. not a bid had been accepted.

Intelligence brought to San Francisco by passengers on the steamer Excelsior from Alaska, regarding the wonderful richness of the newly discovered placers on the Clondyke river, is verified by private letters from men of known veracity and sound judgment. The stories told discount everything previously reported in gold-producing regions. J. Goldsmith, a miner, writes from Alaska: "You have heard something about it no doubt, but not half what it really is. I will not say much about it to you, as I don't want to excite you. The richest thing I know of is No. 30, on the Eldorado creek, a tributary of Bonanza. Three men shoveled in eighty-five pounds weight in gold dust in seven hours. That is considered good grounk here. Living has been very plain and expensive here this winter. Flour is $1 80 a pound, or $54 a sack. Dried fruit is $1 25 a pound, and bacon the same." These finds are vouched for: One woman took from a single pan of gravel $122; some pans produced $500. One man with a rocker took out $80,000. The rockers must be cleaned of gold twice a day. A man who took ont $100,000 in gold paid $300 for his claim. The placers are on British soil, but American miners are getting a full share of the gold. The trip is a long and tedious one, being over 5000 miles. The Alaska Commercial Company runs a steamer between San Francisco and St. Michaels, and on the Yukon it runs five freight and passenger steamers. The last steamer by this route which will connect with river steamers going to Dawson, sails on the 28th instant. The fare is $150 first-class and $125 second-class to the Clonyke from San Francisco, and the journey consumes about six weeks. Each passenger is allowed 150 pounds of baggage. Experts advise miners not to go with less than $1000.

Strange Sugar of Inyo Piute Indians.

It may not be generally known that in Inyo county, around Independence, the Piutes gather a kind of sugar from the leaves of a species of bamboo reed which grows alongside Owens river. It is a singular fact that this "sugar" is the product of minute green insects which may be seen upon the leaves. A representative of this paper recently witnessed the Indians cleaning this product, which they did by drying the leaves in the sun, then breaking them up and winnowing through fine sieves. It was a strange and interesting sight, and probably they used this sugar ages before the white man settled here. The substance is of a light brown color, and in taste resembles honey to a degree. It might be an interesting exhibit for the museums of the great cities.

Reasons Why Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy Is the Best.

1. Because it affords almost instant relief in case of pain in the stomach, colic and cholera morbus.

2. Because it is the only remedy that never fails in the most severe cases of dysentery and diarrhoea.

4. Because it is the only remedy that will prevent bilious colic.

5. Because it is the only remedy that will cure epidemical dysentery.

6. Because it is the only remedy that can always be depended on in cases of cholera infantum.

7. Because it is the most prompt and most reliable medicine in use for bowel complaints.

8. Because it produces no bad results.

9. Because it is pleasant and safe to take.

10. Because it has saved the lives of more people than any other medicine in the world.

The 25 and 50c sizes for sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Rev. Hugh Lamont, uncle of the murdered Blanche Lamont, interviewed Durrant at San Quentin prison. During the conversation Rev. Lamont said, "I believe in your guilt, but if you are an innocent man the evidence would be soon forthcoming." Durrant refused to discuss the question as to the murderer, but said he was sorry he could not attend the Christian Endeavor convention.

Copper	11.12½

R. P. Hession Jr. was in town Sunday

Miss Josie Turner of Big Pine is in town.

Harry Mead of Bishop is a visitor in town.

Mrs. M. H. Church of Citrus is visiting Bishop.

E. H. Edwards of Lone Pine was in town Monday.

Miss Jeanette Wood returned Sunday from a trip to Mrs. L. Joseph of Big Pine.

Miss Maud Cook goes to Hawthorne to-morrow to visit her sister, Mrs. Church.

R. S. Miner Esq. arrived Monday from Bodie. He has a case before Judge Lamar this week.

Mrs. J. Morton has returned to Keeler after a couple of weeks' visit with her mother, Mrs. James Rose.

State Superintendent Black has apportioned $3111 74 of State school money to the funds of Inyo county.

A drunken Indian was arrested in town last Sunday. He had spurred his horse till it was covered with blood.

Miss Fannie D. Simpson, formerly of Bishop, was married June 30th to John A. Wellfare of Los Angeles.

The name of John H. Lubken of Lone Pine is on the list of recent graduates from Heald's College, San Francisco.

County Treasurer Bunney, Sheriff Given, Fred Edgington, and J. R. Moffatt have gone for an outing to Kings river.

Finley Bedford and family and Miss Morrissy came up from Mojave in a four-horse rig Monday, fully equipped for a summer at Mammoth.

Wonder of the regular annual fair will be held at Bishop this year? It is nearing the time when something should be done, if anything is intended.

M. C. Lasky of San Francisco came down on Wednesday's train. He is one of the plaintiffs in the mining suit now pending in the Superior Court.

Deacon Gale, the jovial C. & C. conductor on the south end this week, expects to start for San Luis Obispo next week for a week's vacation.

There are about 300 people camped at Mammoth and vicinity, and more going in every day. A more delightful spot for a summer outing cannot be found.

J. E. Rose and Bertha Way of Bishop were married at Bishop last Thursday. They left immediately for Bodie. Both are well known here, and our best wishes are tendered them.

Mrs. D. J. Hession was summoned last Sunday to the bedside of her sick mother, Mrs. S. A. Smith, at Bishop. The lady was seriously ill, but when last heard from, her condition was improving.

Mrs. Ellen Naylor, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Etta Naylor, expect to start for Reno next Tuesday, where they will make their future home. Miss Naylor is an expert telegraph operator and has a lucrative position there.

A party of townspeople went out to the Bell residence last Saturday evening and had a merry time, dancing until 12. Music was furnished by Matlack's Orchestra, and the party returned from Camp Independence in jolly spirits.

A miller advertises in the Bishop Register, advising his patrons to exclude rocks from their wheat, as they do not make good flour. Pretty rocky when a man has to give this advice. Now we know what's the matter with our bread.

Asa Hall is canvassing Mono county for the appointment as the Register of the local Land Office. It is reported that F. E. Densmore Esq., J. D. Lewis Esq. and S. W. Austin are seeking the same position. The longest pole gets the persimmon.

The wonderful qualities of the climate of Onion Valley—about 9,000 feet above sea level—are exemplified in the case of Al Goodman and Harry Floyd, the jovial fellows who were sick here lately. Their lank appearance before their trip suggested the danger of their being blown down at any moment by the playful wind, but now they are getting strong and hearty. It is said Al's hearing has so improved that he can hear a pin drop at a distance of a mile and an eighth. Harry feels able to lift a horse (a young one), and scorns hardships so much that when his mule ran away he did not try to bring him back. Mr. Wheeler is camped with them, and says if a man does not feel well in the valley he will not anywhere.

Mining Suit.

Yesterday the case of Lasky vs. Carrasco came up for trial in the Superior Court before Judge Lamar. The plaintiffs were represented by P. H. Mack Esq. and P. W. Forbes Esq., and the defendants by F. E. Densmore and Miner Esq. A large number of witnesses are on hand, and quite a number of interested persons are in town. The case will probably last all next week. The suit involves the title to about 200 feet of the Krynot mine, in Beveridge district.

Answer to Indian Correspondent "Black in the Face."—1. No; California whisky is not good; that is, not for Inyo Indians. You are not even allowed to use it as antidote for snake bite. 2. Your marriage to a white girl would not be legal under California laws, but you may marry your cousin or your deceased wife's sister. 3. Yes, you can safely say you are more truly American than people of Anglo-Saxon descent. Do not write your poetry in the Piute language and it may be published. 4. Judge Davidson issues marriage licenses.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following deeds were filed for record during the week ending July 22, 1897:

E. L. Cross to J. F. Given—Comet mine, South Park mining district; consideration $1000.

Annie Turner to Helen Wright—Property known as Turner ranch at West Rishop; consideration, none stated.

Wm. Cameron to J. L. Stotler—One-third interest in Aurora mine at Tuber canyon; consideration $1.

"Last summer one of our grand-children was sick with a severe bowel trouble," says Mrs. E. G. Gregory of Frederickstown, Mo. "Our doctor's remedy had failed; then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which gave very speedy relief." For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, County of Inyo. May 26th, 1897.

TO THE HEIRS OF JOHN WILSON, DECEASED.

YOU ARE HEREBY NOTIFIED THAT I have expended $800 in labor and improvements upon those certain mines or mining claims situated in Beveridge Mining District, Inyo county, California, commonly known as and called the St. Telmo mine, Benicia mine, Montano mine, and the Santa Cruze mine, as will appear by certificates filed in the office of the County Recorder of said Inyo county, in order to hold said premises for the years 1895 and 1896, under the provisions of Section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United states, being the amount required to hold the same for the two years ending December 31st, 1896. And if within 90 days after the publication of this notice you fail or refuse to contribute your proportion of such expenditures as co-owners, to-wit, $200, your interests in said claims will become the property of the subscriber under said Section 2324, and under Section 1 of an Act entitled, "An Act relating to the working, rights of way, easements and drainage of mines in the State of California" (approved March 31st, 1891.)

Thirty Pounds in Thirty Days.

REMARKABLE GAIN IN WEIGHT OF A CALIFORNIA MINER.

A Physical Wreck and Not Expected to Live—He Begins the Use of Pink Pills and in Three days is Able to Walk—His Friends Corroborate His Testimony.

From the Republican, Santa Rosa, Cal.

Here is a true story from California: Some three years ago, James H. Falkner, of Santa Rosa, while prospecting, discovered a quicksilver mine, and while preparing to work it, was alone on his ranch, far from anyone. It was there he was attacked by pneumonia, and when found five days after and carried to his home he was apparently dying. He did not die, however, but for over a year was in daily expectancy of death from what was pronounced by nearly all the physicians as consumption.

At the end of about one year Mr. Falkner heard that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were sometimes efficacious in such maladies as his, and procured some. The result was astounding, for before three boxes of the pills had been taken, the man who had been given over, and could not walk without assistance when he began their use, was working at his trade, and has ever since been a hale and harty man.

These facts are vouched for by such men as Sheriff Allen, Mr. C. L. Mabley, the City Clerk, of Santa Rosa, Mr. Perry Fitts, the well-known lumber dealer, and many others, and were made the subject of quite an extended article in the Santa Rosa Republican, by Mr. Virgil Moore, the well-known correspondent, who resides near Mr. Falkner, and was familiar with the whole circumstances.

Dr. Williams Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are sold in boxes (never in loose form, by the dozen or hundred) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or directly by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

NO MORE LATE HOURS.

Citizens of This Town Must Come In Out of the Night Air.

The town council of Blackshear, Ga., has passed a most unique and interesting ordinance, making it an offense for any citizen of any age, size, color or sex to be found on the streets after 10 o'clock at night without a good excuse.

When seen on the streets after that hour, they will either be arrested or their names taken by the marshal, and they must appear before the mayor the next morning and explain their appearance at that hour in a satisfactory manner or pay the customary fine.

They call it the "curfew ordinance," and it was passed for the purpose of getting rid of a gang of loafers known as the Brahma gang.

It hits all the citizens, however, and it is said there is liable to be a strong kick against such stringent legislation. —Atlanta Constitution.

Railroad Trainmen

are especially liable to kidney disease, caused by the constant jolting and nervous strain to which they are subjected.

Warner's Safe Cure

restores the kidneys to healthy action. Here is one of many testimonials on this point:

M. Nevin, 154 North Curtis Street, Chicago, Ill., says:

"I am an engineer on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, and have run an engine for the past twelve years. The constant jolting brought on kidney trouble. I tried various remedies, but not until I began the use of Warner's SAFE Cure and Warner's SAFE Pills, was I benefited. In my opinion it is the best remedy in existence for men employed on railroads, and no remedy can equal it."

Warner's SAFE Cure is sold in large or (new size) small bottles, by all druggists.

What is the missing word?

Get Schilling's Best tea at your grocer's; take out the Yellow Ticket (there is one in every package); send it with your guess to address below before August 31st.

One word allowed for every yellow ticket. If your ticket (or tickets) reaches us before July 1st, you are entitled to two words for each ticket.

If only one person finds the word, he gets one thousand dollars. If several find it, the money will be divided equally among them.

Every one sending a yellow ticket will get a set of cardboard creeping babies at the end of the contest. Those sending three or more in one envelope will receive a charming 1898 calendar, no advertisement on it.

Besides this thousand dollars, we will pay $150 each to the two persons who send in the largest number of yellow tickets in one envelope between June 15 and the end of the contest—August 31st.

Cut this out. You won't see it again for two weeks.

WIFE DANCED IN PANTS.

This Did Not Suit the Husband, So He Sought a Warrant.

William and Louise Deitrichs, man and wife, aged respectively 19 and 14 years, who live in Canarsie, a suburb of Brooklyn, appeared recently in the Grant Street police court, where William asked that his wife be arrested.

"What for?" asked the justice.

"Well, she's too fresh."

"That's no crime. Besides, she looks young enough to be fresh. How old is she?"

"She's 14 years old, and if she's old enough to be married she's old enough to behave herself."

"How has she been misbehaving?"

"She had some boys up to see her, and she put on my pants and danced for them."

"Is that true?" the justice asked the girl.

"There wasn't any harm in it," said she. "I had on his whole suit. I only did it for fun."

"I can't put her under arrest for that," said the justice to the youthful husband, "although I don't approve of it."

"Then I want a warrant for my mother-in-law and her father."

"What have they been doing?"

"When I kicked about my wife's acting bad, they licked me. They said, 'You're part of our family now,' and then they biffed me good."

Here William evinced signs of tearfulness.

"I guess they won't do it any more," said the justice. "You don't want to have any trouble in the family if you can help it. It will spoil your whole life. Let me talk to the girl for a few minutes."

After the conversation the young wife promised that she would be more careful in the future, and she and her husband went away together.

"That is what comes of children marrying," said the justice.—New York Sun.

RICHEST ENLISTED MAN.

Only a Common Soldier, and Yet He Laid Up a Fortune.

With simple military honors the oldest and wealthiest enlisted man in the United States army was buried in the National cemetery at West Point recently.

He was Michael Cashman, who for more than 40 years served in the army service detachment stationed at the military academy. During the past few years he has lived in Highland Falls, enjoying the fruits of his long and faithful service.

On the meager pay and allowance of an enlisted man Cashman accumulated a small fortune. It is figured all the way from $50,000 to $100,000, no one knowing the exact amount. The poor old soldier worked unceasingly and hoarded his little fortune because he idolized an only child, a beautiful young girl.

She was educated at Mount St. Vincent, N. Y., and was afforded every opportunity to get an excellent education. Last November the young woman died, leaving an infant child. She died of a broken heart, her mother having expired suddenly only a short time before. The death of his daughter was a great blow to the old soldier. It was unexpected, and he never recovered from the shock.

Fell and Laughed.

Elmer F. Butts, aged 2 years, lives with his parents in Carlisle avenue, Cincinnati. One afternoon recently he was playing on the third floor of his parents' home when he climbed on the window sill. Suddenly he lost his balance and fell to the walk below, a distance of 25 feet. A number of persons saw the child fall and screamed, which attracted the attention of the tot's father, who ran down, expecting to find the mangled corpse of his little one. Instead he found Elmer sitting up looking around and laughing in high glee. A doctor was summoned and after a very careful examination found that the little one had escaped without an injury. How this result was achieved is past comprehension.

His Busy Day.

Thomas Kennedy of Sidney, O., was arrested one morning recently for drunkenness. In the afternoon he was taken before Mayor Nessler and fined $5 and costs. He had no money, but secured the fine and costs and was released. Within an hour after being fined he came back to the mayor and wanted to be married. He brought his fiancee, Miss Mary Wilkerson, with him. The young lady paid for the license and the mayor's charges, and the mayor then performed the ceremony.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Anecdote and Incident

The late Professor Jowett had a curious way of commenting on the work that was brought to him by students. On one occasion he was shown a set of Greek verses. After looking them over carefully, he glanced up rather blankly and said to the author: "Have you any taste for mathematics?"

In one of the small New York towns where the residents swap farm products for groceries, a boy was sent to the store by his mother, and this (says the New York Times) is what an astonished outsider heard him say to the store-keeper: "Mister, ma says you're to please give me a egg's worth of mustard. The hen is on."

When Dr. Whewell, master of Trinity College, Cambridge, was a tutor, he once invited a number of his men to a "wine"—as the entertainments of those days used to be called. Noticing a vacant place, he said to his servant, "Why is not Mr. Smith here?" "He is dead, sir," was the reply. "I wish you would tell me when my pupils die!" was the indignant answer.

An Irish conductor on a branch of Boston's West End railroad came into the car one day and called out, "Wan seat on the roight! Sit closer on the roight, an' mek room for the leddy phwat's standing." A big, surly-looking man who was occupying space enough for two said, sullenly, "We can't sit any closer." "Can't yeez?" retorted the little conductor; "begorry, you niver wint coortin', thin." It is needless to add that room was made "on the roight" for the lady.

An amusing story is told of how the late Lord Fitzgerald discomfited a treasury official who was sent over from England to complain of the excessive expenditure for coal in the Lord Chief Justice's court. He received the man, and listened gravely and formally while the latter stated his errand and enlarged upon the importance of economy in the matter of fuel. At the conclusion of the discourse, he rang the bell, and, when the servant appeared, said: "Tell Mary that the man has come about the coals."

Joseph Chamberlain is a young-looking man, though not so youthful as a few years ago, when he was a member of Gladstone's administration. Crossing the Irish Sea one day, when the steamer was overcrowded, he was accompanied by a bearded private secretary. The latter picked an acquaintance with a Scotchman, with whom he discussed the slim possibility of securing berths. "You and I, mon," said the Scotchman, "will occupy the berths, and the wee laddie"—indicating the distinguished statesman—"can just lie himself down on the floor."

The papers are full of tales just now of how the late composer, Brahms, treated pianists and singers who were eager to get his criticism. If one of these aspirants for his favor was fortunate enough to find him at home and be received, Brahm's first concern was to seat himself on the lid of his piano, a position from which he rightly deemed few would have the temerity to oust him. If this failed, he had recourse to the statement that the instrument was out of tune. "Oh, that does not matter," remarked one courageous individual. "Perhaps not to you, but it does to me," replied the master. On one occasion, he was just leaving his house when a long-haired youth, with a bundle of music under his arm, hailed him with: "Can you tell me where Dr. Brahms lives?" "Certainly," answered the master, in the most amiable manner; "in this house, up three flights," and so saying, he hurried away.

Signor Arditi, the musical conductor, whose baldness is well-known, wore a wig only once in his life. It was in New York, and he bore as philosophically as might be the surprise betrayed by the orchestra at his novel appearance. But, while the musicians were tuning up, he began to feel uncomfortable. Presently the door opened and Albont peeped in. Arditi knew that the prima donna had an ineradicable abhorrence of wigs. "Where is Arditi?" she inquired of one of the company. "Here I am," replied the conductor, rather shamefacedly, stepping forward. She looked at him for a moment, and then burst into laughter. "What, Arditi!" she called; "is it indeed you in that wig? Never, in the world! My good friend, I should never be able to sing with that before me. Here!" With one bound she seized upon the unfortunate wig, dragged it from his head, and threw it to the other side of the room. He did not replace it; and though he always fancied that a wig would become him, he never again wore one.

A Curious Natural Phenomenon.

One of the most curious natural phenomena, and one which has never yet been explained by the philosophers, is that in reference to the expansion of freezing water. The case of water is a singular exception to all natural laws of expansion by heat and contraction by cold which apply in cases of all other known liquids. When water is freezing, it contracts in bulk down to the point where the mercury reaches the reading of 39½ degrees, or 7½ degrees above freezing, from which point it slowly expands according to the intensity of cold. No other liquid is known to possess this remarkable property, except that certain metals expand slightly in passing from a liquid to a solid state. But if heat be applied to water after it has cooled down to a temperature of 39½ degrees—the point where it is ready to begin expanding, should a greater degree of cold be applied—it will immediately expand by the universal law. But should we lower the temperature to 32 degrees it will expand by its own special law. Another curious point to be noted here is this—the amount of expansion is as great in water lowered from 39½ degrees down to 32 degrees as it is in water that has been heated so that the temperature runs from 39½ to 47 degrees. These points are certainly odd and curious and worthy of attention and experiment.

A Philosopher Corrected.

When Benjamin Franklin went to Paris as the representative of the revolted American colonies, he had to be presented to the King, and it was a matter of some solicitude with him how he should array himself for that ceremony.

He was anxious not to be considered lacking in respect for the French court, where much formality regarding dress was observed; but he knew it would be an affectation for so simple a republican as he was to imitate the court dress. He decided, therefore, and wisely, to appear in a plain suit of black velvet, with white silk stockings and black shoes.

Nevertheless, he deemed it best to make one concession to the French fashion of the time by wearing a wig—something which he had not been accustomed to do. He ordered of a wigmaker the largest one the man had, and in season for the presentation the man himself brought the wig and set about trying it on.

But do all he could, the man could not squeeze the wig on the philosopher's head. He tried and tried, and also essayed to convince Franklin, against the evidence of his senses, that the wig was a fit. Finally Franklin said:

"I tell you, man, your wig is not large enough."

Upon this the Frenchman threw the wig down in a rage.

"Monsieur," he said, "that is impossible. It is not the wig which is too small. It is the head which is too large!"

Accepting the rebuke as deserved, Franklin went to the presentation without any wig, and found there that the simplicity of his dress and the honesty and candor of his manners won him more esteem at the court than any concession to fashion could possibly have done.

Formation of Words.

The latest addition to the English language is the word "bike;" and it is here to stay, since Queen Victoria has conferred the title of sergeant bikeman on the footman who taught the numerous divers princes and princesses the art of cycling. From time to time words are coined when needed to tersely describe a fact or situation. About fifty years ago Coleridge deliberately coined the word intensify, because he required it to express a certain shade of meaning. In Spenser's time, "throughly" was good English, but it has since been suffering from suspended animation. Our very useful word, "outsider," never saw the light until Mr. Polk was nominated for President. Professor Marsh says that an undue pressure was made upon the delegates by those who were not delegates, and some reporters described it as a pressure from "outsiders." The term filled a long-felt want, and soon established itself as a constitutional part of the language, yet Hart says that it had no more real claim than upper-sider, undersider, insider, left-sider, and right-sider. The words sculptor, peninsula, suicide, opera and umbrella, were unknown until the seventeenth century. In the last century Bentley was criticised for using the then novel words repudiate, concede, vernacular, timid and idiom; and Campbell hesitated about using the very new words continental, sentimental, originate, criminality, capability and originate. Horace says, "Use is the law of language, whether of single words, grammatical form, or grammatical construction." But Pope, in his "Essay on Criticism" gives some wholesome advice—"In words as fashion, the same rule will hold;
Alike fantastic, if too new, or too old;
Be not the first by whom the new is tried,
Nor yet the last to lay the old aside."

Life Saved by Hanging.

Charles Peachey, of Marblehead, Mass., who has been discharged from the Salem hospital, is the only man in the world with a mended backbone. The surgeons had to hang him literally by the neck in order to mend it. But they succeeded, and his case is now attracting attention. The patient had been at the hospital since Oct. 24. All that he requires now is time in order to make him as good a man as he was before his back was broken.

The case has been one of great interest from the first. Peachey was picking apples from a tree at the Crowninshield farm, when the limb broke and he fell a distance of twenty feet, striking on his back. Upon examination it was found that his back was broken, and he was sent to the Salem hospital. In order to reduce the fracture it was necessary to resort to unusual methods. It could not be done with the patient lying in bed or in any other ordinary position. It was necessary to hang him by the head and neck.

So suspended in midair, the trunk was tightly bandaged with strips of cotton cloth saturated with plaster of paris. When this dried his form was held and supported firmly. This uncomfortable suit of clothing was not removed until Nov. 15, when it was found that the fractured vertebrae had knit together successfully. The backbone had been broken right on a line with the shoulder blade, and the spinal cord had been lacerated. This injury had also been healed.

The patient is now able to sit up in a chair. He is able to move his head and arms, but has no control of his body below his shoulders yet, owing to the paralysis of the nerves. This, however, will be only temporary.

Hard to Please.

The son of a well-known Providence lawyer came home at the end of his first term in college exulting in the fact that he stood next to the head of his class. His father was less easily satisfied.

"What! Next to the head?" he exclaimed. "What do you mean, sir? I'd like to know what you think I send you to college for! Next to the head, indeed! Humph! I'd like to know why you aren't at the head, where you ought to be!"

The young man was naturally crestfallen, but upon his return to college he went about his work with such ambition that the end of the term found him in the coveted place. He went home very proud indeed. It was great news.

The lawyer contemplated his son for a few moments in silence; then with a shrug of his shoulders, he remarked: "At the head of the class, eh? Humph! That's a fine commentary on Brown University!"

Why Maria Starts the Fire.

At the unholy hour of four, the time when all the world should snore, I'm awakened by a slamming door,
By my Maria.

She rises Phoenix-like from bed, puts on a rig to knock you dead, then in a moment she has fled
To build the fire.

I hear a rumble and a roar, like wrecks upon a rockbound shore, then bang, down falls a ton or more
Of coal for that blasted fire.

I hear a rattle, a roar, and slam, a muttered word that sounds like clam, she's wrestling with that fiendish pan
Of ashes from the fire.

Then into the cold world she goes, and bumps against a wind that blows about her from those misfit clothes.
O, my, that blasted fire!

The pan of ashes veers about, I hear a wild bloodcurdling shout, the contents have been emptied out On my Maria!

She rises in her fearful wrath and kicks the ashpan up the path; then comes the rest, the aftermath;
She sails in on the fire.

She works an hour and maybe more; I hear the contest through the door;
I hear her struggling o'er the floor;
At last she builds the fire.

Then when it blazes cheerfully, my dear
Maria steeps the tea, and cooks the buckwheats hot for me,
On that old kitchen fire.

No sign of conflict in her air, how calm, how sweet beyond compare, is my
Maria, so dear, so fair,
Who builds the kitchen fire!
—New Haven Register.

What the Wood Fire Said to Little Boy

What said the wood in the fire
To the little boy that night,
The little boy of the golden hair,
As he rocked himself in his little arm-chair,
When the blaze was burning bright?

The wood said: "See
What they've done to me!
I stood in the forest, a beautiful tree!
And waved my branches from east to west,
And many a sweet bird built its nest
In my leaves of green
That loved to lean
In springtime over the daisies' breast.

"From the blossomy dells
Where the violet dwells
The cattle came with their clanking bells
And rested under my shadows sweet,
And the winds that went over the clover and wheat,
Told me all that they knew
Of the flowers that grew
In the beautiful meadows that dreamed at my feet!

"And the wild wind's caresses
Oft rumpled my tresses,
But, sometimes, as soft as a mother's lip presses
On the brow of the child of her bosom, it laid
Its lips on my leaves, and I was not afraid;
And I listened and heard
The small heart of each bird
As it beat in the nests that their mothers had made.

"And in springtime sweet faces
Of myriad graces
Came beaming and gleaming from flowery places,
And under my grateful and joy-giving shade,
With cheeks like primroses, the little ones played,
And the sunshine in showers
Through all the bright hours
Bound their flowery ringlets with silvery braid.

"And the lightning
Came brightening
From storm skies and frightening
The wandering birds that were tossed by the breeze
And tilted like ships on black, billowy seas;
But they flew to my breast,
And I rocked them to rest
While the trembling vines clustered and clung to my knees.

"But how soon," said the wood,
"Fades the memory of good!
For the forester came with his ax gleaming bright,
And I fell like a giant all shorn of his might,
Yet still there must be
Some sweet mission for me;
For have I not warmed you and cheered you to-night?"

So said the wood in the fire
To the little boy that night,
The little boy of the golden hair,
As he rocked himself in his little arm chair,
When the blaze was burning bright.

Sound Photography.

The reported discovery of a method of sound photography is by no means incredible, since the photography is not direct and the original sound waves set up a vibration on a drumhead. This drumhead is in contant with a certain liquid in such a way that the resultant photographs are wondrous geometrical designs, due to the expansion and vibration of this liquid. But there does not appear to be any particular value to the invention, otherwise than as a mere curiosity. The sounds even from the same person of the same tones would never be exactly alike.

"After the Deluge."

The origin of the oft-repeated phrase is attributed generally to Prince Metternich; but Douglas Jerrold ascribes it to Madame Pompadour. The sentiment is, however, traced back to Suetonious.

CHEAP IRRIGATION.

The Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, Cal., the largest builders of gas, gasoline and oil engines on the Coast, are making extensive preparations for the season's business.

They are filling several orders for large irrigating plants and as this line of their business increases each season, it is safe to say the farmers throughout the State are appreciating the advantages of irrigation with water pumped by this cheap power.

The Hercules Works are at present building an 80 H. P. engine for Geo. F. Packer, Colusa, which will raise 6000 gallons per minute from the river and distribute it over his land. This will be the largest gasoline pumping plant in existence.

PLEASANT WORLD OF BOOKS

There are who find their happiness in strolling near and far,
As if perchance their birth had been beneath some errant star,
The trackless desert beckons them, they scale the mountain peak,
And ever just beyond them see, some gladness coy to seek;
For me, I sit beside my fire, and with benignant looks
From dear familiar shelves they smile, my pleasant friends, the books.

A world of sweetest company, these well-beloved ones wait
For any mood, for any hour; they keep a courteous state,
Serene and unperturbed amid the ruffles of my day,
They are the bread my spirit craves, they bless my toiling way.

A pleasant world is theirs, wherein, through battles wax and wane,
There rolls the sound of triumph, and there dwells surcease of pain,
On pages sparkling as the dawn forever breathes and glows
Through aged red with patriot blood, white freedom's stainless rose.

In this fair world of calmest skies, I meet the martyr's palm
There float to it dear melodies from coasts of heavenly balm;
All comfort here, all strength, all faith, all bloom of wisdom lives,
And be the day's need what it may, some boon this wide world gives.

The freedom of the city where one walks in crowds, alone,
The silence of the upland, where one climbs anear the throne,
The blitheness of the morning, and the solemn hush of night,
Are in this pleasant world of books, for one who reads aright.

Here, pure and sharp the pictured spire its cleaving point uplifts,
There, swept by stormy winds of fate, time's sands are tossed in drifts.
And I who sit beside the fire am heir of time and sense,
My book to me, the angel of God's sleepless providence.

Who will, may choose to wander far over sea and land,
For me the table and the lamp extend a friendlier hand;
And I am blessed beyond compare while with benignant looks
From home's familiar shelves they smile, my pleasant world of books.

—Margaret E. Sangster, in Youth's Companion.

A MODERN DEBORAH.

At the eastern extremity of the long, straggling street of Nagy-Nemethy, are the crumbling ruins of a deserted house.

More than forty years ago, when the Hungarian people awoke and began to rattle their chains, there lived in this house a young Jewish couple, Adolf Sonnenfeld and his wife Eglantine. Although scarcely fifteen years of age when her husband took her from her parents' watchful care, she was no half-opened bud, but a glorious woman, a blooming rose of Sharon. Sonnenfeld, like many a young German townsman, was a slender, fair-haired young fellow. His wife, Egla, was a lovely Jewess of the purest type. Suppressed fervor lurked behind the cold gaze of her dark, scornful eyes, and the mobile mouth could soften sweetly to the warming kiss or harden with deliberation for command. Her husband was merely a practical man of business, of a sly and cunning disposition, called good-humored by his friends because he was too cautious to risk doing an injury.

In spite of the differences in their characters, Egla seemed to love her husband even more than her fatherland, and that speaks volumes, for she was an ardent Hungarian. She had borne her husband two children, and through her teaching they were growing up with a fervent love of home and fatherland.

The storms of February swept over Paris, and the feverish March days in Vienna were followed by the Hungarian rising, while her character was developing from day to day in strength and energy. But when, in October, the revolution brought the Hungarian army before Vienna, her zeal for the national cause at length took tangible form.

One morning at breakfast, having scanned the newspaper, she commenced: "Adolf, every one is taking up arms for the fatherland, old men, boys, and even women. Why do you hold back?"

"Are you mad?" cried Sonnenfeld, half-irritated, half-frightened; "what is Hungarian liberty to me? I am a Jew. Even if I wanted to go to the war they would only laugh at me. I don't know how to hold a gun."

"You can learn——"

"I sha'n't think of it!" cried Sonnenfeld, cutting her short; "we have soldiers enough—I am no hero!"

The truth came home to Egla that her husband was no hero, very shortly. Hussars came into the village, and then all who had hitherto held back came forward and joined the colors. Sonnenfeld alone was not to be seen; he seemed to have disappeared, and only came in sight again after the last horseman had quitted Nagy-Nemethy. Egla found out afterwards that he had hidden in a recess in the cellar, and been supplied with food and drink by the cook. Her first impulse was to take away her children, and leave the husband whom she despised for his cowardice. Sonnenfeld fell on his knees and begged her to stay; he raised his hands to heaven and implored her with tears in his eyes not to leave him, and when at last the children interceded, she remained.

From that day she treated him with silent disdain. That proved more galling that open hostility or reproaches. Hitherto he had taken no interest whatever in the struggles of the fatherland, but now he began to interest himself more and more. But his sympathies were all with the anti-Magyar party. He hated the agitators who had robbed him of his wife's love, and the patriots whose heroic courage branded him as a coward. He could barely hide his joy when Windischgratz, with the imperial troops, crossed the frontier and pushed on to Buda-Pest, but Egla grew ever paler, ever quieter. When the Hungarian capital fell and the national troops fell back on Debriezen, Sonnenfeld felt sure that all was over. He went about radiant and joyful, as if he had won the victory or inherited a million.

It was not long before the First Imperialist Light Cavalry showed themselves in Nagy-Nemethy. A whole brigade followed and pitched camp in the neighborhood. Some of the soldiers were billeted in the village, and the general himself took up his quarters in Sonnenfeld's house. The husband surpassed himself in hospitality, loyalty and attention, to the wants of his guest. Egla, who held herself aloof, timid but inimical, one day saw the general kick her husband out of the door. She felt as if her heart was crushed, then the blood rushed to her face, but she endured in silence.

A few days later, hussars appeared in the neighborhood, and the Imperialist outposts exchanged shots with them. During the night the brigade became alarmed, for the Hungarians approached on all sides and threatened to overwhelm them. Every one was afoot, the inhabitants stood in the street doors whispering, while cannon and heavily armed cavalry rattled by. Egla, who had dressed herself rapidly, found that her husband had left the house. She glided out after him, only to find him by the garden hedge deep in conversation with the general. Sonnenfeld bowed obsequiously as he spoke, and the general laughed amicably. The laugh seemed to Egla even more insulting than the kick he had given her husband a few days back. She only caught detached words and isolated phrases of the conversation; but she gathered that while her husband wa sassuring him of his devotion, the general was complaining that he could gain no information even from the poorest peasant. At sunrise an adjutant arrived bearing a sealed letter for the general, on reading which he gave the order for the Imperialist troops to withdraw to the south.

The changeful scenes of the Hungarian winter campaign followed in quick rotation, each day bringing contradictory reports. Egla was consumed with anxiety and excitement, and she passed sleepless nights of watching, only to sink wearied and exhausted on her couch as daylight approached, and when the bright sunlight streamed in upon her, she would awake with a start as if aroused by some horrid dream.

Business was at a standstill, Sonnenfeld alone showing a restless activity. He contracted for provisions of all kinds for the supply of the Imperialist troops, and after visits from suspicious-looking characters, would absent himself from home for days together. Egla watched him with anxious heart an dincreasing uneasiness.

One beautiful, sunshiny winter's day, hussars, with loaded carbines, rode into the village. The villagers received them with loud hurrahs and cries of welcome, and the joy was increased when a Honved battalion followed them on foot. The Hungarians halted, picketed their outposts, sent out patrols to all points of the compass, and their duty over, began to think of the commissariat. The inhabitants of Nagy-Nemethy brought out the best they had to compensate the brave fellows, if ever so little, for the hardships of their campaign. Egla did not like to follow the example of the others without first obtaining her husband's consent. She went in search of him, but was unable to find him, either at home or anywhere in the village. Evil forebodings took possession of her mind.

Night closed in. Every one slept in Nagy-Nemethy—every one but Egla. She sat on the bed waiting and listening. She felt that she must wait and listen for—something! Something so terrible it hardly took form in her mind, yet it was something that had been hanging over her for a long time. She sat and waited—one hour—two hours—till she grew drowsy from sheer exhaustion. Suddenly she was startled. Was it the sound of shots?—what was that confused noise? The trumpets brayed, words of command were heard, and the firing increased. She ran to the window, and as she threw it open a bullet whistled past and impinged upon the wall behind her. She drew back quickly and extinguished the light. There was fighting in the streets of Nagy-Nemethy.

The Imperialists had advanced upon the Honved battalion under cover of the night, and the Hungarians had been overpowered. A few of them managed to escape with the colors, but the rest were taken prisoners or died the patriot's death.

Egla sat in her room like one in a trance; her thoughts stood still. The time passed away, but she was heedless of it till suddenly she started at the sound of voices in the next room. Her husband had returned, and with him—— How well she knew those clear, commanding tones as she listened to the words of praise and the promise of a great reward—to her husband.

The Imperialists did not remain long, and her husband went away in their train. Egla obtained a conveyance, and, wrapping her children up warmly, drove away with them to her father's house. Having placed them in safety, she returned home on the third day and awaited her husband's return.

On the fuorth evening after her return she heard her husband enter the house softly, like a thief, and like a thief he started when his wife, candle in hand, stepped out of her room before him. Placing the light upon the table, she seated herself, and coldly and sternly, like a judge, she commenced her examination.

"Where were you?"

"I have done a good bit of business.'

"I know it."

"I have delivered a contract for bread and bacon to——"

"You have delivered up your brethren? You spy!" shrieked the Jewess, flaming with indignation.

"What do you mean?" Sonnenfeld was pale as a ghost.

"I overheard your conversation with the general."

"Anything further?" and the husband tried to laugh.

The beautiful Jewess stood up and gazed steadily into his face. "This further. You are a traitor and deserve to die, but I have loved you and would not have the name that I have borne, and the name of my children, dishonored before the world. You shall not, therefore, swing from the gallows as you deserve, for I will let you kill yourself here upon the spot."

"I believe you have lost your reason," cried her husband.

For answer she glided quietly into her room and fetched a loaded pistol. "You must die," cried Egla, "and if you have sunk so low that you do not understand how great is the enormity of the crime you have committed, or if your cowardice be so great you dare not kill yourself, then will I be your executioner in the name of the fatherland."

She placed the muzzle of the pistol against his breast, when the wretch fell upon his knees, begging and entreating her to spare his life.

The tragic figure stood superbly above him, gazed at him for a moment with unutterable contempt, and then uncocked the pistol.

"No, truly, you are not worth powder and shot."

She turned from him and went into her own room, when he feverishly sprang to the door and fastened it behind her.

Egla listened, and when she felt certain her husband had gone to bed, she wrapped herself in a fur cloak and stepped out through the long window into the night.

As day broke the tread of horses sounded in front of Sonnenfeld's house, and a few blows from the butt end of a musket soon broke open the door. Hussars, with his wife at their head, burst into the room where he was sleeping.

"There is the spy," cried she, coldly; "he is my husband, but I would see him hanged."

Sonnenfeld, whining vainly, pleaded for pardon, as the hussars bound his hands behind him and dragged him forth. His wife looked on in silence. When the rope was placed round his neck, and the end slung over the lime-tree, she swung herself into the saddle of a horse that the hussars had prepared for her and galloped away, followed, in a few minutes, by the soldiers.

At the taking of Waitzen a beautiful woman rode in front of the Honved battalion—it was the Jewess of Nagy-Nemethy. Once again was she seen in the forefront of the fight when the Poles of Mazuchelli's regiment stormed the green hill of Komorn at the point of the bayonet, and there she fell riddled with bullets, but wrapped in the standard of her country and staining its colors with her blood.—Translated from the German of Sacher-Masoch by Henry B. Collins, for the San Francisco Argonaut.

The Logic of Good Manners.

To say "Yes, sir," and "No, ma'am," is now considered bad form in what is known as the upper class of society. It was good form once; it went out of vogue among "gentle people" in England because servants and tradesmen did it a great deal, and it came to sound like the talk of servants and tradesmen. The example set by social England was soon followed in America; nevertheless, according to the Listener, "Yes, sir," and "No, sir," may be said to belong to the logic of good manners. The French have not discarded the words "monsieur" and "madame" in similar situations because servants use them, and our abrupt "yes" and "no" seem to them unmannerly and surly. Certainly "yes" and "no" from children have an unmannerly sound, and the substitute system of "Yes, Mr. Blank," and "No, Aunt Mary," is complicated and subject to a great many difficulties—such, for instance, as those which occur when the child is not sure of the name of the person he is addressing. No doubt there is such a thing as being too slavish in our following of English manners, and this may be one of the matters in which it might have been well to declare our independence. The practice of using "sir" and "ma'am" in the way designated still survives among people of unquestioned breeding in this country. Their adherence to the older form of courtesy can but be respected, and one may say "No, sir," without positively convicting one's self of belonging to the "lower classes."

Making an Artificial Skin.

A process has been patented in Germany for making a substitute for the natural skin for use in wounds. The muscular coating of the intestines of animals is divested of mucous membrane and then treated in a pepsin solution until the muscular fibers are half digested. After a second treatment with tannin and gallic acid a tissue is produced which takes the place of the natural skin, and which, when laid on the wound, is entirely absorbed during the healing process.

Criticism.

"Now, really, what do you think of it?"

"Well, Mr. Daubley, I—— Do you want my honest, candid opinion?"

"I do."

Well, I—I—I don't like to think of it."—Harper's Bazar.

Cultivator Follower.

Cultivating the growing crops is highly conducive to growth, but in times of dry weather there is an enormous evaporation from the soil that has just been stirred by the broad teeth of a cultivator, the land being left in loose ridges. Some advocate hanging a board behind to drag the surface of the earth down smooth. This has a tendency to pack the surface, which is not desirable. Hang the board as shown in the cut and insert in the lower edge a row of forty-penny wire nails, removing the heads. This will leave the surface smooth and level, but loose, so that the air and sunshine can enter, while at night the moisture-laden air will enter, the moisture will condense as it is cooled by the ground, and so will remain in the soil.—Orange Judd Farmer.

FOLLOWER FOR THE CULTIVATOR.

Fair Farmers.

Well, why shouldn't farmers' girls study agriculture? Is there any good reason why the State should provide for the education of the farmers' boys and allow the girls to get their training wherever they can? Wouldn't it be a good thing to introduce coeducation at the agricultural colleges? These questions may have been raised before now, but we do not think they have been adequately discussed. Perhaps there has not been sufficient demand on the part of the country girls for an agricultural education. It may be that they are too desirous to leave the farm to think of preparing themselves for woman's work on the farm.

Minnesota has a girl's school of agriculture, said to be the only one in the country. It has been established for many years, and the results are mentioned with pride by the Minnesota papers. The students receive instructions in cooking, canning, fruit and flower culture, dairying, household chemistry, entomology and sewing, and the farmer who gets one of these well trained girls for a wife is very fortunate. Any one can see how a woman educated in agricultural pursuits to which she is adapted may make herself very useful and very contented on the farm.—Exchange.

Shed for a Silo.

In building a silo outside of a barn in some localities it will be necessary to provide some means of protecting it from the extreme cold. This may cheaply be done by means of a cover shed, an outline of which is shown in an illustration from Country Gentleman. The space between its walls and the walls of the silo could be filled with straw or leaves, and thus be made to serve a double purpose, furnishing storage room and also protecting ensilage.

COVER SHED FOR SILO.

White Clover for Pasture.

It is one of the advantages of rough, rocky land that as it cannot often be cultivated nor ever very thoroughly, the surface soil is pretty sure to be filled with white clover seed. It is said to be natural to such land, which means that it has so long occupied the soil that there is plenty of seed to grow whenever it has a fair chance. It is an excellent pasture grass, as its roots run near the surface and quickly respond even to light rains, which will not revive other grasses. It is greatly helped by a dressing of gypsum. On long-cultivated ground, especially where no clover has been thickly seeded, there will be little white clover visible. But even there it is often ready when it gets the chance.

Sweet Corn for Feeding.

There are a good many farmers who grow sweet corn for market who do not care to grow any other kind, because having only small places, if the two kinds are grown, there will be more or less mixed grains in the ears. What corn they cannot sell green they grind and feed to stock. The sweet corn dries down harder than will the corn whose carbon is starch rather than sugar. It is also much lighter than the field corn after its surplus of water has dried out of it. Sweet corn ground with the cob makes a meal that cattle and horses are very fond of when fed with cut feed. But as its weight is less than the field corn meal, more must be fed to secure the same results. It is not more nutritious than common corn meal, if so much so, but it may be used sometimes to tempt the appetite of an animal that has been cloyed and thus restore digestion to its normal activity.

Horse Hints.

Being gentle with a horse will help him to be gentle.

Keep the colt fat and he will make an easy-going horse.

Sores on horses' shoulders are largely the result of ill-fitting collars.

An excess of food weakens a working animal and disables it from work.

If young teams are overloaded they are apt to become discouraged or vicious.

Take the horse to the harness shop and see that a collar fits him before you buy it.

Blood, food, care and training are the essentials necessary for producing a first-class horse.

To a very considerable extent the most costly farming is that done with poor teams.

There are few diseases to which horses are subject but are easier prevented than cured.

Good grooming does not only add to the animal's comfort, but to its healthfulness as well.

When the horse is brought in from work he should be given a good drink; if too warm to drink he is too warm to eat.

Feeding a little wheat bran with the other grain will help to make the horse's hair sleek and glossy.

The best farm horse is the one with a kind and tractable disposition, well broken and serviceable.

The farmers will always be poor who continue to raise $50 horses at an expense of $100.

The feed and care necessary to raise a poor horse costs as much in every way as it does for one of the best.

A horse needs exercise every day to keep his system properly regulated and make his hair to be bright and sleek.

A New Egg Plant.

While the egg plant is grown very extensively as a market garden crop, it is seen far too little in home gardens, and yet there is no difficulty in raising it. The main point to be observed is that the plant is a very tender annual and has to be started in a hotbed or greenhouse. Many fail with it because they set out the plants too early. There is no use to plant them outdoors so long as there is any danger from frost or even so long as the nights are very cool, although actual frost does not occur. One-half dozen plants will be sufficient for a moderate sized family. Where potted plants can be procured from the florist or plant grower, they are far preferable to those taken up direct from the seed bed. Until recently there has been but very little choice in varieties, the New York Improved Purple having been almost the only variety raised, but now there comes the "Pearl," a white-fruited egg plant equal in size and quality to the New York Improved. The plant is stated to be remarkably productive and the fruit of the finest quality, either baked or fried.—American Agriculturist.

PEARL EGG PLANT.

Prunes Are Profitable.

There ought to be much more extensive planting of the German prune. We found it years ago the most paying fruit we could grow. It was always in good demand and at better prices than plums. The prune is also a surer bearer than the plum, unless we may except some of the new Japanese varieties. Yet, though the prune may be grown nearly everywhere, it has been planted so sparingly in the East that a large part of our supply of dried prunes comes from the Pacific coast States, where its cultivation, to market 3,000 miles east, has been found very profitable.—American Cultivator.

Rye Exports.

While rye is always prone to follow wheat in its fluctuations, the price has been at a much greater discount than an average, one year with another. To this must be accorded the sharp increase in the export business, which amounted to nearly 6,000,000 bushels during the past nine months compared with only 333,000 bushels the same period a year earlier. Were there any adequate outlet, however, we could spare much more of our annual crop, which approximates 30,000,000 bushels. It is here seen that low prices help rye exports.

Farm Notes.

Changing pasturage maintains better thrift.

Cultivate thoroughly whether the weeds grow or not.

It is mistaken economy not to feed young, growing pigs well.

A supply of salt should be kept where the stock can help themselves.

Keep the teams in a good condition by feeding and grooming regularly.

An animal must have a good appetite if you expect stamina and constitution.

The stables in which the teams are kept should be well ventilated, free from flies, and also kept free from foul odors.

When you once make a stunted animal you can never make the same animal you could had generous feed been given.

During the summer, with stocks in the pastures especially, rock salt is the easiest and most economical way of supply.

During the summer especially, sawdust is one of the best materials that can be used for bedding for the stock in the stables.—Farmers' Union.

FANTASTIC TEACHERS.

Take Pupils to Visit Jails and Criminal Court Proceedings.

This, says the Chicago Chronicle, appears to be the age of fads and faddists. Until quite recently Massachusetts has been commonly looked upon as the breeding ground for the tribe. Persons who are familiar with the social and moral topography of Boston say that, in proportion to population, it enjoys the ministrations of more Societies for Attending to Other People's Business than any other city in the world. But Chicago is a "good second," and in some respects leads the procession in strange theories and experiments.

It is only a few days since a class of well-grown girls and boys in one of the schools in the southern part of the city spent an entire day, under the chaperonage of one of the teachers of the school, in attendance on the criminal courts on the North Side. Can anyone imagine the effect on the mind of an ingenuous boy of the revelation of baseness and vulgarity and the tawdry pseudo-heroic that must attend such an exhibition as they witnessed? Let any man of honorable instincts and fair culture look back into his own youth and answer. As to the shock, the coarsening, the vulgarizing of all human things by such experiences on a young girl in the transition stage between child and woman it is not possible for anyone to measure it.

Only last Saturday a professor in Northwestern University took fifteen young girls from that institution on a tour through the county jail, the bridewell, etc., giving them a close view of the men and women charged with crime and shut up in those places. It was an amazing performance. No doubt those young women feel as if they would never get the jail smell out of their nostrils. Stil less will they be able to get the moral odor out of their lives.

It is astounding that any teacher would assume to take young girls on such an expedition without the consent of their parents, and it is quite as astounding if that consent was given.

It is impossible for any unwarped vision to see any good result to flow from such things. The minds upon which they can have any deterrent effect are precisely those which least need it. Probably more than a dozen of the fifteen girls thus led through unspeakable moral muck by this recreant guardian and guide would have gone through long lives without even knowing that such things be, and would all the time have been as pitiful and as ready to lend a helping hand to any case of distress that might come in their way.

On the other hand, the consciousness of being made a show of can affect the prisoners only unfavorably. Not one of them can be benefited in any possible way.

Many are disposed to criticise the women of our day for the display of morbid tastes and an unwholesome longing to be something that is not feminine and yet cannot be masculine. But it is not their fault so much as that of their education. It is rather chargeable to the vicious and morbid ambition among teachers of all grades to invent something new. There is common sense enough in the profession of teaching, and, though it is admitted that common sense is usually associated with modesty, still it is difficult to see why those who are guided by it allow the fantastic cranks and faddists in the profession to play such conspicuous parts.

Pure English.

The relation between good language and good manners is so close that no person who habitually uses slang expressions can hope to be considered perfectly well bred. Unfortunately, some of these corruptions of language have a certain vigorous swing that carries with it a fictitious appearance of strength. These expressions are often extremely vivid and striking, even witty. Such characteristics constitute a strong temptation to employ them, for they are sure to raise a laugh, particularly if uttered by a bright, cultured girl. But the ephemeral applause gained by such means is not worth having. Here is another case where the game is not worth the candle; once contract the vulgar habit of using slang, and you will find yourself unable to express your ideas without it. No other evil grows so rapidly, particularly among our girls. When a young lady, a college graduate, remarks that she "kicked herself" for making an embarrassing observation in company, and another equally well-educated girl observes that she would like to subscribe to a certain charity but she "is strapped this month," it seems time to call a halt in the downward march. As to the use of expletives, nothing can be said in their defense. While such exclamations as "Sugar of lead!" "O glory!" and the like cannot be held as exactly coming under the head of profane swearing, they certainly add no strength nor beauty to one's conversation and are inexcusably vulgar. "Woman," says Bishop Potter, "can wear no greater charm than that of reserved, cultivated, choice speech. Use your eye, your mind, your lip to lift up the great tongue, Shakspeare's tongue, which we all inherit."

He Won.

"Alas!" groaned the young man; "I never thought you would treat me in such a Fitzsimmons manner."

"What have I done?" she asked, anxiously.

"Hit me straight over the heart," he gurgled.

But in this case the one who was knocked out got the prize.—Philadelphia North American.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR, ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JULY 30 1897

THE Review of Reviews for July in discussing the "Right to Work" question, well says that the inequality of condition between the very rich man and the ordinary citizen who has the opportunity to work steadily for standard pay, is a matter of slight concern, comparatively speaking. "The seriously disturbing factor is the existence of a shifting but never disappearing element of men unemployed or but half employed."

That this is a truth no careful observer of conditions and activities can deny. The greatest problem of the age is not the monetary question, but that larger one, the furnishing of opportunity for all men who want to work, and ought to work, but cannot secure employment. It is perfectly true, as the Review says, that notwithstanding the distress of the great army of workers in the clothing trade on the east side of New York, lately involved in a great strike, while they worked incredible hours for a beggarly pittance, they were, or most of them, better off in their Polish homes over the waters and their children are vastly better off under American conditions. The Review believes that it is only a matter of time when these conditions will be still more improved, and there will be better wages and easier hours. But what more concerns the American people is the larger body of men "in more highly developed trades who are the victims of intermittent industrial activity" living under the constant dread of the closing down of a mill or factory. It is unquestionable that the complaint of instability by these constitutes the most serious question for the American people to-day, and that it gives to the demand for State labor supply, based upon the resources of all citizens of the country, force and momentum to which we cannot remain insensible. That demand is not one that is likely to be conceded, nor is it one that harmonizes with the civilization we want in America.

A solution must be had and we believe will be found for this difficulty, and that out of the unrest and discontent of the present there will come means equal to the need, means that all thoughtful men and well wishers of their kind must hope for. But we do not believe that this accomplishment is to be had through the taking of any of the political nostrums that patent monetary reform fantastics offer as specifics. The betterment that is to give us stability in industrial walks is not likely to flow from adoption of the ideas of financial theorists who would upset what we have and give us more experiment in its place.

We need fixity of the tariff and settlement of the monetary questions also, upon a practical basis backed by experience. Above all we need to stop the immigration of foreign workers, both skilled and unskilled, to this country. We need that protection, and those guards thrown about American industries that will prevent them being the shuttlecock of foreign competition and shifting vain legislation that aims to better the worker's condition by rendering timorous and cowardly the capital necessary to the forwarding of all great industrial enterprises.

There must prevail the assurance of justice alike to the wage-earner and the employer. Confidence is the greatest present need and to the destruction of that essential there appears to be a class of agitators devoting their best energies, evidently determined that this country shall be kept in a state of distrust and unrest with the single alternative of accepting their particular and patent cure-alls. In short, there is too much of partisan politics freed into the question of the needs of labor.

In New York, July 26th, there was a repetition of the almost daily occurrence of a new low record for silver. Bar silver and Mexican dollars were down ¼ cent in sympathy with the decline in London. The reports of the year to date show a slight increase in the export of silver from London, the large decrease in the shipments to China and the Straits greatly diminishing the effect of the large increase in the shipments to India. Wonder if the people of the United States are expected to stand this sort of thing forever—this subjection of one-half of its real money metal to the use of gambling fiends?

Bryan, in a speech before the trans-Mississippi congress at Salt Lake City, said: "The financial independence of the United States is of more importance to the 70,000,000 of people than the political independence of Cuba. I tell you that the gold standard every year kills more people in the United States than Spain kills in Cuba." And he's right.

According to the Expositor there is a movement on foot in Fresno to build an electric railroad out to the Sierras from the raisin center. The streams of the High Sierras, utilized as they ultimately will be, can generate sufficient electric power to run all needed interior railroads.

Whisky is four bits a drink in the Alaska gold fields. A day's wages there ($15) will buy 30 drinks. A day's wages in Esmeralda ($3) will also buy 30 drinks. So what's the use of going to that remote region?—Hawthorne Bulletin.

No attention whatever was paid to that coming "wave" of prosperity in the resolutions and planks adopted by the National Republican League at Detroit. If they believe in it they should have put it in the platform or at least recognized it.

If ever men had cause to strike, the coal miners of to-day have that cause. By cuts in the rate of pay and by enforced idleness, their wages have been so reduced as to bring them to extreme poverty. An Investigating Committee of the Pennsylvania Legislature reports to the effect that the average earnings of the miners of Pennsylvania were in the neighborhood of but $4 a week. In the coal fields of Illinois the average weekly earnings of a miner are given at but $2, out of which they are expected to pay rent and support their homes. That they must go hungry is plain, and they have been driven to desperation. Might as well starve striking for living wages as starve at grinding toil, is their feeling, and so they resort to a strike, into which they have been spurred by the magnified reports of industrial revivals and minimized reports of industrial shut-downs catered up by some of the metropolitan press, reports that have given rise to false hopes. Four dollars a week is a greater wage than the average Pennsylvania miner in reality receives. Added to his loss of income through wage cuts and enforced idleness, is the loss in the purchasing power of his scanty wage through the despicable system of paying him his wages, not in money, but in orders on the company stores. And at these stores exorbitant prices, exorbitant as compared to prices ruling in other stores, are charged for supplies. And these exorbitant prices the miner paid in store orders, must pay, for his store orders, commonly pieces of metal calling for so many cents worth of goods at the company stores, are absolutely worthless at all other stores. So we have, through this practice of payment in store orders, a virtual cut in the wages of miners below that nominally paid, and because of this practice all the more reason has the miner to strike for an increase of wages.

Except as to a place on the Mines and Mining Committee, California has been well taken care of in the House committee assignments. Representative De Vries, while he failed to get on the Rivers and Harbors Committee, secured an assignment upon a committee almost as important for this State, that upon Public Lands. Judge Maguire secures the place he should have had when first elected to Congress, an assignment on the Pacific Railroad Committees and in addition retains his position on the Committee on Elections. De Vries had also requested to be appointed on Committee on Mines and Mining, but no Pacific Coast member was given place on this committee. At his own request Barham goes on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, where he can look after the interests of the Nicaraugnan Canal Committee. Loud is reappointed Chairman of the Postoffices and Postroads Committee, and Hilborn to his old place on the Public Buildings and Grounds and Naval Affairs Committees. Castle gets an unimportant assignment on the Invalid Pension Committee, and Barlow on the Election of President and Vice President Committee. Barham also goes on the Committee on Irrigation. In addition to Judge Maguire there will be nine new members on the Pacific Railway Committee. With one or two exceptions these are all new Congressmen and unfamiliar with the whole Pacific Railroad question. Most of them, however, are known to be men of ability and character, and Collis P. Huntington will not find the new committee as pliable as he did that of the last Congress.

Strange how few of the newspapers on this coast found out till he died that Col. Fred Crocker had so many great virtues. But its the same old story—a man's good qualities are scarcely thought of and rarely mentioned till he's gone.

Reasons Why Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy Is the Best.

1. Because it affords almost instant relief in case of pain in the stomach, colic and cholera morbus.
2. Because it is the only remedy that never fails in the most severe cases of dysentery and diarrhœa.
4. Because it is the only remedy that will prevent bilious colic.
5. Because it is the only remedy that will cure epidemical dysentery.
6. Because it is the only remedy that can always be depended on in cases of cholera infantum.
7. Because it is the most prompt and most reliable medicine in use for bowel complaints.
8. Because it produces no bad results.
9. Because it is pleasant and safe to take.
10. Because it has saved the lives of more people than any other medicine in the world.

Tom Hughes came down from Bishop early in the week, bringing a drummer.

A. E. Janvier has been engaged to teach the Independence school for the coming term.

Miss Travers will teach the Camp Independence school next term. She is expected to arrive here soon, accompanied by Miss Allie Lewis.

Bertrand Rhine has been reinstated by Judge Virden as one of the Executors of the Matschke estate. H. C. Bellows of Olancha is the other executor.

Julius Schroeder and family have returned from a visit with relatives and friends at Round Valley and Bishop. Mr. Schroeder has received his returns from his last run of ore at Alabama, giving $1850 for 40 tons.

A party of young men, consisting of Clifford Baxter, Wm. Harper, Harry Burt, Edward Grindley, Winnie Ellred, Fred Harvey, Irving Woodin and Julian Eibeshutz, returned last Wednesday from a fishing and hunting trip to Kern river and Mt. Whitney.

Aug. Stecker, the well known Inyo mechanic, met with an accident at Keeler a few days ago, narrowly escaping with his life. He was engaged upon the new Fishman building and somehow sustained a fall. He struck on the sharp edge of a paint bucket, cutting a severe gash along the side of his neck and face.

Mrs. J. R. Eldred writes from Big Pine that the people of that place have responded to the Chronicle "fresh air fund" request by offering to provide for thirty-eight youngsters. She says: "The families of this village have sent for thirty-eight children, and the ladies have planned to take them fishing on our mountain stream; also to take them camping on the Bell ranch, where there is lots of shade and green grass—have swinging and two or three days' picnic."

The San Francisco Examiner editorially compares the Randsburg district with Alaska as a field for gold hunters indicating a decided preference for the so-called desert country. It is a fact that for 150 miles northerly of Randsburg, along the Argus, Slate and Telescope ranges and the Amargosa mountains in this county exists one of the greatest partially explored gold regions in America. The difference is that one had better keep out of that interior country for two months in the year on account of the heat and out of Alaska for ten months in the year on account of the cold.

After perusal of our Ballarat letter this week our Valley readers will be impelled to call upon the correspondent for a bill of particulars, as they will take no stock in the idea that anyone here has interfered in the slightest in the matter of obtaining mail facilities for the Panamint region. If they had it would have been settled months ago as it should be, by the establishment of a connecting line from Darwin to Garlock via Ballarat. The fact is that the people here want to see the interests of every section of the county enhanced, and they don't care who gets the offices nor in what camp they may be located. The real difficulty occurs through personal jealousies out there, fostered by influential (?) men who maintain offices behoovings in their hats.

Death of "Old Chick"

Panamint correspondence brings the not unexpected announcement of the death of H. G. Chickering, a well and favorably known old time miner of that district. The cause of his death was dropsy, complicated with other ailments extending back for the past three years. Miners and citizens, particularly Dr. H. E. McDonald, of Ballarat, rendered the old man all assistance and alleviation possible under the circumstances. The deceased leaves married daughters in Los Angeles county, but he declined going there until the trip became impossible. He appeared cheerful and content with the inevitable, directing arrangements for his own funeral, which was attended by as many miners as could get there from the surrounding camps.

FROM THE TELESCOPE RANGE.

New Mining Industry in Old Canyons—An Unwarranted "Kick"

BALLARAT, June 18, 1897.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT—I suppose that a few items of news and information regarding the camp and its prospects will be in order, and while I am not given much to correspondence for publication will endeavor to post you as to happenings of interest occurred and occurring here. Foremost, of course, are the mining items, and from what I know personally and can learn from reliable people the future of this camp and district as a gold mining proposition is very bright and assured.

The properties in Tuba Canyon which were bonded by Messrs. Pheby, Donahue et. al. are looking fine, and development and prospecting work is being prosecuted vigorously on several of the claims, under the superintendency of Mr. Morgan. This group of mines alone will undoubtedly support a supply center of no insignificant size, and when mills are built and stoping commences will furnish employment for many men. In the immediate neighborhood and on the same belt there are besides several other properties which are considered by their owners and mining men competent to judge equally valuable as those which are being developed. This is notably the case with such mines as the Gem and the Burro and their extensions, in Jail Canyon the properties of Messrs Curran, Henebry, Shepherd, Warnock and others, and the Tuber and Aurora claims, in Tuba Canyon, owned by Driscoll & Stotler.

In Pleasant Canyon the Worldbeater and other mines known as the Montgomery properties have closed down temporarily, pending the purchase and installation of a new mill of greater capacity nearer the mines, in order that the expense of packing and hauling the ore several miles may be saved, when the stoping and milling of the immense deposit of low-grade and medium ore already developed will be renewed vigorously.

In that part of the district southward of here known as the Mineral Hill and Redlands Canyon country there has been a change of ownership of several claims. If one deal now in negotiation is closed, for the transfer of an immense deposit of low-grade gold ore known as the "Scotchman" a 40-stamp mill on the mine is one of the certainties of the near future.

There are besides numbers of other prospects here which, as "chloriding" or mining ventures, if situated in a more accessible district, would create quite an excitement. There has been a pressing demand and want felt here for a custom mill and the want is about to be partially filled shortly. Martin & Co. have purchased the 5-stamp mill below here and will proceed immediately to remove the same and set it up here; they are prepared to sample and grind or buy outright all ores brought to them. I have heard some talk of Anthony removing his mill to this place for the same purpose, but know nothing definite regarding it.

The weather here has been (of course) very warm, but with the exception of five or six nights it has been cool and pleasant enough to sleep at night. We had quite a celebration on the Fourth, considering the circumstances. A paper was circulated and the storekeepers and residents subscribed liberally. We had foot races, hammer and stone-throwing, burro and horse racing, giant powder salutes and a grand tug of war, in which every male inhabitant and visitor to the place, Indians included, took part, save one who from his immense size and strength was debarred from either side and officiated as referee. The camp had visitors and delegations from almost every canyon, and while there were plenty of exhilerating drinks and exhilerated men the day passed off smoothly and without rows or unpleasantness. In the evening the people were entertained by addresses on the "Commemoration of the Day" and "Its Significance," by Mr. I. Coyle and your friend the writer. While we may have been a trifle incoherent, due to the effect of cold lemonade and exertions of the day, there can be no doubt that the audience appreciated our sentiments and understood us, as witnessed by their hearty applause.

Building at the camp is at a standstill for the summer. Stotler & Co. have completed the store part of their new concrete building and are occupying it; they will finish the other part as soon as cooler weather sets in, which I expect will be about the 1st of September.

We are about to inaugurate a stage and mail line between here and Garlock, for the needs of business and the accommodation of miners and residents. For the present the service will be a single round trip weekly, to be increased to a tri-weekly one on the arrival of cooler weather and the resumption of mining activity. Whether justly or not, you people of the county seat and Owens River Valley are held responsible for the delay, vexation and annoyance experienced here with regard to the postoffice and the service of mail to us, and it would certainly seem to me to be a short-sighted and foolish policy for you people or at least those of you with business interests or political ambitions, to antagonize us in this matter. The bulk of our business is forced to be done and our freight come via Mojave and Garlock; this country is more accessible in both low freight charges and passenger fare from that direction, and as a matter of self interest we are forced whether so inclined or not to do our purchasing below. You know this as well as we do and we cannot understand what you expect to accomplish unless it be bitterness of feeling by trying to force our mail communications to come in by a roundabout way. Mail communication and connection with the county seat is not only desirable but necessary, and we must have it; but in order to obtain it surely it is not necessary to antagonize us and try to prevent us having what is and must be our main and direct communication with the outer world.

Well, as I have an engagement to meet a man in about five minutes who is crazy to give me a million dollars for one of my numerous mines, and as I know you wouldn't care to be even the unwitting cause of my losing that little wad of pocket money I'll close. More anon.

Yours, C. A. M.

"Last summer one of our grandchildren was sick with a severe bowel trouble," says Mrs. E. G. Gregory of Fredericksburg, Mo. "Our doctor's remedy had failed; then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which gave very speedy relief." For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Mouse, the Indian who killed two men on the Colorado last Winter, has been at last run down and properly "done up."

Grading on the Valley railroad from Reedly to Visalia has been completed. The Reedly bridge was finished July 20.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following deeds were filed for record during the week ending July 30, 1897:

A. C. Finley to W. R. Cameron—Oro Fino and Christmas Gift mines, South Park District—$5.

W. R. Cameron to Louis de Tourniel—125 feet each in Oro Fino, Christmas Gift, Combination and Expectation mines, South Park District—$100.

Chas. Wonnacot to Riverside School District—School lot—$10.

Jno. R. Miles to Louis B. Heise—60 inches water in Hughes & Edson ditch—$10.

Chas. Everett to Addie Everett—Canadian Boy mine, Lee District—$1.

Milton S. Clark to Maymie B. Clark and T. C. Harniss—Hotel property, Bishop—$1,000.

"Tuba" or "Tuber."

Incorporation papers No. 26,585 were filed by the Secretary of State June 23d, of the Tuber Mining Company. San Francisco is the principal place of business and the Directors are: Thos. B. Pheby, Nat Stein, Henry Wadsworth, Oakland; H. Dutard, Henry H. Lynch, Thomas B. Bishop, J. G. James, San Francisco. Capital stock, $10,000,000 in 100,000 shares at $100. "Tuber" means an enlarged root, generally applied to the American spud; or, anatomically, to a swelling—neither very appropriate to mining nomenclature. The Panamint Indian name of the canyon around which the mines are situated is Ta-bah or Tuba—meaning pinyon or pinenut. Tuba in English is an ancient trumpet, under which appellation the mines might toot unto the time of Gabriel.

"Yes, the dear, dear girls," muttered Mr. Pawkins despondently.—Pick Me Up.

A LETTER TO WOMEN.

A few words from Mrs. Smith, of Philadelphia, will certainly corroborate the claim that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is woman's ever reliable friend.

"I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly.

"For nine weeks I was in bed suffering with inflammation and congestion of the ovaries. I had a discharge all the time. When lying down all the time, I felt quite comfortable; but as soon as I would put my feet on the floor, the pains would come back.

"Every one thought it was impossible for me to get well. I was paying $1 per day for doctor's visits and 75 cents a day for medicine. I made up my mind to try Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has effected a complete cure for me, and I have all the faith in the world in it. What a blessing to woman it is!"—MRS. JENNIE L. SMITH, No. 324 Kauffman St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Beware Of Mercury!

Mr. Henry Roth, of 1848 South 9th Street, St. Louis, was given the usual mercurial treatment for contagious blood poison. He was twice pronounced cured, but the disease returned each time, he was seized with rheumatic pains, and red lumps and sores covered his body. "I was in a horrible fix" he says, "and the more treatment I received, the worse I seemed to get. A New York specialist said he could cure me, but his treatment did me no good whatever. I was stiff and full of pains, my left arm was useless so that I was unable to do even the lightest work. This was my condition when I began to take S. S. S., and a few bottles convinced me that I was being benefitted. I continued the medicine, and one dozen bottles cured me sound and well. My system was under the effects of mercury, and I would soon have been a complete wreck but for S. S. S."

S. S. S., (guaranteed purely vegetable) is the only cure for real blood diseases. The mercurial treatment of the doctors always does more harm than good. Beware of mercury!

"CHILDREN TEETHING."

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP should always be used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhœa. Twenty five cents a bottle. It is the best of all.

HUMOR OF THE WEEK

STORIES TOLD BY FUNNY MEN OF THE PRESS.

Odd, Curious and Laughable Phases of Human Nature Graphically Portrayed by Eminent Word Artists of Our Own Day—A Budget of Fun.

Had Something on His Mind.

Gibbs—What are you loafing about town at this time of night for?

Dobbs—'Fraid to go home. Wife told me to be sure and remember something, and I've forgotten what it was.

Gibbs—It wasn't groceries, was it?

Dobbs—No.

Gibbs—Baby food, tacks or theater tickets?

Dobbs—No; but I've thought of it.

Gibbs—What was it?

Dobbs—She wanted me to remember and come home early.—Tit-bits.

A Heartless Stratagem.

"How did they stop the elopement?" asked Maud.

"By a detestable piece of trickery," replied Mamie.

"They came very near getting away in safety."

"Yes. But her father put his head out of the window and shouted that her hat was on crooked and when she grabbed for it she upset the tandem."—Washington Star.

What He Told.

Newlywed (proudly)—I always make it a point to tell my wife everything that happens.

Old Sport—Pooh! That's nothing. I tell my wife lots of things that never happen.—Tid-Bits.

Not One of the Family.

Grocer—So you're the new cook at Pickingham's. I suppose they treat you like one of the family?

Judith—Sure, and they don't. They're always polite to me.

An Imposing Gift.

Mrs. Hornbeak—I wonder what we'd better give Cousin Em'ly for a weddin' present? It ought to be something cheap that will make a big show.

Farmer Hornbeak—Guess we'd better give her a load of hay, then.—New York World.

His Ominous Behavior.

Nurse—Please, mum, you must send for the doctor quick for little Johnny.

Mistress—Horrors! What is the matter?

Nurse—I don't know, mum; but he hasn't been up to any mischief for two hours.—Golden Penny.

At a Safe Distance.

"If that Simpson boy comes foolin' round me again I'll just soak him."

"Pooh, you're no fighter."

"Well, I'll do it with the hose."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

It Might Be Better.

"What kind of a wife shall a young man marry?" asks a magazine writer. It strikes us that he'd better not marry any kind of a wife. Let him take a widow or a single young woman.—New York Advertiser.

Social Aspirations.

"I noticed a pair of little bootblacks working on the partnership plan this morning," said the Cheerful Idiot, "and it occurred to me that probably they were prompted by social aspirations."

"What is the answer?" said the seasoned boarder.

"They seemed to want to shine in company."—Indianapolis Journal.

An Inventor.

"Has your son any special talent?" asked one man.

"Yes," replied the other; "I think he's an inventor.

"Has he invented many things?"

"Yes; most of them reasons why I should give him money."—Washington Star.

Welcome.

"It was so friendly and reassuring," commented the enthusiast, "to read the signs and see that word 'welcome' every now and then."

"Oh, I don't know," replied the man who wants the earth. "It's nice at first glance, but you invariably find it simply means you are welcome for what you can pay for."—Washington Star.

A Disadvantage.

Manager—We don't want you if you are left-handed.

Batter—Why not?

Manager—Well, we have one left-handed man, and every time he hits the ball he runs to third base instead of first.

How She Got It.

Briggs—Mighty pretty bonnet your wife had on last Sunday. At least, my wife said it was.

Braggs—Yes; and it all came from my absent-mindedness that she got it.

Briggs—How's that?

Braggs—When I went home the other evening, thinking very intently about business, as I often do, I found my wife in the kitchen. Now, what should I do but hand the bird I had brought home to my wife and kiss the cook! Of course, she knew it was all a mistake, but—oh, well, you know how women are.—New York Tribune.

Had Him There.

"I believe you women spend half your lives before the glass."

"And the men half theirs behind it."—Pick-Me-Up.

The Painful Kind.

The admiral is paying a semi-annual visit to one of the battleships and has signaled to the flagship for his flag lieutenant to come to him.

The flag lieutenant, dubious as to the correct dress, goes in quest of the cabin door sentry (a marine).

"Sentry, did the admiral go away in his cocked hat?"

Sentry—No, sir; in his steam launch.

Collapse of "Flag Jack."—London Answers.

A Sympathetic Success.

Wayside Watts—Hallo, Brannagan; fer goodniss sake, wots th' new lay yer workin'?

Bright Brannagan—An idea I got wen I found dis old, broken bike, pard. I stop every biker I meets an' tells him 'bout bein' robbed an' me wheel wrecked, an' inserdently makes a little touch fer dough enough ter tellygraft home fer aid. See?

Craps.

Nice Gentleman—How old are you, little boy? And how old is your brother?

Swipsey—We're craps.

N. G.—Craps?

Swipsey—Yes. Jim's seven and I'm leven.—Kansas City Star.

The Advantage.

"The rooms are rather small," said the prospective summer boarder.

"The advantage of that," said the hotel-keeper, complacently, "is that not so much fresh air is required to keep them cool."—Philadelphia North American.

Too Good to Live.

Murray Hill—My wife is the best-hearted woman in the world. I don't believe there is another one like her.

Pete Amsterdam—Is that so?

Murray Hill—When she slanders any of her friends she doesn't believe it herself.—New York World.

Modern Ideas.

"I'm afraid you'll never know how to write, Tommie," said his teacher, sadly.

"Don't care," said Tommie. "Uncle Jim is going to send me a typewriter for my birthday."—Harper's Round Table.

A Slow Boy.

"I hear, Grumpy, that your hired man is down with slow fever."

"Of course he is. He's too infernal slow to catch any other kind."—Detroit Free Press.

Helping a Fellow Out.

Pay-Day Humor.

Scribbler—Does your wife laugh at your jokes in the paper?

Punster—Yes, but only on pay-day.—New York Tribune.

An Easy Promise.

"Didn't I see you pitching pennies with that little Sprankle boy?"

"Yes."

"Well, don't you do it again. Do you hear me?"

"Yes'm. I won't do it no more. He hain't got a cent left."—Northwest Magazine.

The Ruling Passion.

"I bet that girl's always borrowing trouble. She has such a sad face!"

"Yes, she's probably looking for a sorrow to match."—Detroit Journal.

The Usual Question.

Lecturer—The entire history of the world has moved in cycles.

Sprocket—What make?—Philadelphia North American.

A Guest's Opinion.

"What have you against this hotel?" demanded the landlord.

"Almost everything is 'extra' except the meals. They're the worst I ever contended with."—Detroit Free Press.

A Delicate Compliment.

"That delightful Capt. Casterbridge paid you a great compliment at dinner last evening."

"What was that?"

"He took me for my sister."—Punch.

Elaborate Japanese Coffins.

Many Japanese coffins—especially those of the richer Buddhists—are extremely elaborate, brilliant and beautiful. The Shinto religion enjoins simplicity and reserve, dignity, and somewhat neutral colors and materials. The Buddhist is a showy religion—a religion of bright color and gleaming surface. Many of these coffins are absolutely square boxes. The dead is placed inside in a sitting posture, and the box is then completely packed with carmine. That preserves the body indefinitely, they say, and it is much easier to enter and remain in paradise if the body does not decay. The custom of placing the dead in a sitting posture in their coffins was once general. It is still a rather general custom, but grows less and less.—New York Times.

A Sympathetic Judge.

"I make whisky," said the moonshiner, "to make shoes for my little children!"

The judge seemed touched, for he had children of his own. "I sympathize with you," he said, "and I am going to send you to the Ohio penitentiary, where you can follow the shoe business for two years!"—Atlanta Constitution.

The Library Corner

A. E. Keet, editor of the Forum during the last two years, has resigned his position.

"The Pursuit of the House Boat," by John Kendrick Bangs, will be issued in book form.

M. Berthelot, the eminent French chemist, intends to publish the many letters from Ernest Renan which he has in his possession.

It is said that Stevenson's story, "St. Ives," is to be completed, and that the name of the author chosen for this responsible task will shortly be announced.

Justin McCarthy was just able to finish the additional volume of his history before his illness became severe. He had worked so steadily over the book as to have been under a considerable strain.

"Dariel," the new novel by Mr. Blackmore, author of "Lorna Doone," is to be published in the autumn. It has been running serially in England, and is considered one of the author's best novels.

The literary monument of the late Archbishop of Canterbury is his important work, "Cyprian, His Life, His Time, His Work," which is to be published immediately, with an introduction by Bishop Potter.

About the time of the Crimean war Carl Marx wrote a series of newspaper letters on the Eastern question. His daughter, Mrs. Marx Aveling, has been collecting them—not an easy task—and they are to be published as a book.

Pierre Loti is at work on a drama for which he has obtained the material from papers in the possession of his family. The piece is an historical play dealing with the period of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. It is intended for the Comedie Francaise.

Opie Read's "The Jucklins" is receiving rather more favorable reviews in England than it did at home. The London Telegraph ascribes the growing English interest in American rustic life to the pioneering work of Harold Frederic.

One of the longest novels of the year will be Hall Caine's "The Christian." The passages omitted from the serial are to be restored in the book, and the work is expected to cause considerable discussion. It is probable that its publication will be deferred until the autumn.

The committee that has been formed to erect a monument to Paul Verlaine is preparing for publication a small volume containing some unpublished verses of the poet, in addition to contributions by Stephane Mallarme, Henri Bauer, Edmond Lepelletier, and other writers.

Mr. Crockett's autumn book will be "Lochinvar." That is to be followed by a shorter story called "The Standard Bearer." He has just returned from Pomerania with the materials for "The Red Ax." But these make only a beginning on the five years' contracts that Mr. Crockett still has ahead of him.

Ian McLaren will not publish any work of fiction during this year, but he will issue one, if not two, religious books before Christmas. The scene of his next volume of stories will probably be laid, in part at least, in America. He is making progress with his life of Christ, which will probably be entitled "The Life of the Master."

Too Long in the Business.

One day in a Sixth avenue chop house a well-dressed young man sitting at a table not far from me finished his lunch and asked for his check, but as it was brought to him he suddenly rose up and hurried to the cashier's desk, which was near the door, and said:

"Sir, I have dropped fifty dollars out of my pocket in this place. Let no one go until I make a search."

"Where's your check?" he was asked.

"Here it is. I had two twenties and a ten dollar bill."

"Will you pay this check of one-fifty?" asked the cashier.

"I can't till I find my roll."

"Thomas, call in an officer."

"What for?" asked the victim.

"To arrest you if you don't pay. That's an old game—too ancient to work here."

"But I have dropped fifty dollars!"

"Guff! Will you pay?"

"I'll pay if I can find my money. I know I had it when I came in here."

"Call the copper, Tom!"

Two minutes later an officer bustled in to see what was wanted. The cashier was telling him that he had a dead beat to be cared for, when a woman rose up to leave and the young man's fifty dollars was found on the floor, where it had been covered by her skirts.

"Didn't I tell you so," he exclaimed, as he returned to the cashier to pay the check. "Nice sort of man you are! I'll sue you for damages before I'm through with this!"

The cashier looked tired but made no reply. When the indignant young man had departed, I said:

"Then he wasn't a beat, after all?"

"The slickest kind," he replied.

"But he lost his money, and it was found?"

"Don't you believe it! The woman was his pal and gave it up only when she saw that he would be arrested. Your Uncle Hiram has been right here for twenty-five years, and he knows the ropes!"

A Thrifty Georgia Negro.

Barton F. Powell, of Albany, Ga., a negro 32 years old, is one of the most successful farmers in the State. Twelve years ago he had saved up $2,000, with which he bought 500 acres of land. He went to work on it and cleared $2,500 the first year. He has continued to add to his landed possessions paying spot cash for every farm purchased, and is now the owner of 2,100 acres of land, from which he markets 400 bales of cotton annually. Besides his success on the farm he has developed the country supply store idea, and thus rakes in thousands of dollars a year. He also owns a comfortable residence in Bainbridge. His profits last year were over $7,000. He says that the question of social recognition doesn't trouble him so long as he can get financial recognition at the bank.

SQUARED ACCOUNTS.

HOW DE SMITH TURNED SEVERAL TABLES ON HIS FRIEND JONES.

Started In With a Shower Bath, Followed With Several Other Annoying Pleasantries and Wound Up With a Grand Onslaught of Life Insurance Agents.

"Well, I guess I've got even with Jones all right enough for all the practical jokes he has been playing on me for the last week," said De Smith gleefully, as he hung up his coat and took his seat at the luncheon table with a party of friends.

"How's that?" asked one of the friends.

"Well, Jones is a great joker, you know," explained De Smith. "He thinks it's a good thing to thump and pound like the deuce on a fellow's door as he goes down the hotel corridor about 2 o'clock in the morning. He never goes to bed when a decent man should, and he rather resents it if any of his friends do. He has been pounding on my door that way now almost every morning for the past week."

"Why didn't you get up and kick him?" asked one of the party.

"I did try to three or four times," replied De Smith, "but he always got down the hall a little way and then laughed at me. But I'm even with him now. I was fixed for him when he came along this morning. I had a big pail of water fixed over the transom, and when old Jonesie came along and began thumping I pulled the string fastened to it, and I heard old Jonesie curse under his breath and mutter, 'Darn you, De Smith, I'll get even for this.' Then he walked down the hall and I looked out in time to see him shaking the water off his coat and hat."

"That was getting even pretty well, old man. I wish I could have seen him when the flood struck him," put in one of the party.

"Oh, that was all right for a starter," said De Smith, "but it wasn't half the dose I gave him after. You see, Jones has been breaking my sleep for a week, and it took more than a bucket of water to square accounts. I anticipated his visit of this morning, so last night before going to bed I left an order to call him at 6 o'clock. Old Jonesie didn't get to bed before 3 o'clock, so he didn't get much sleep before 6. Then a bell boy began to pound on his door and shout that it was time to get up. Jones shouted back to the boy to get out or he'd break his neck, but the boy replied that he had orders to get Jones out of bed and he was going to do it. Finally Jones got up in his rage and hustled down to the hotel office to find out 'what in thunder they meant by breaking his sleep that way.' The clerk told him there was an order for a call at 6 o'clock, and that was all he knew about it.

"Well, Jonesie went back to bed, but he didn't get to sleep again. I paid the bell boy enough to prevent that, and at 9 o'clock he came down to breakfst. I was down town by that time, so I rang Jonesie up on the telephone. My office boy got him on the wire and told him to wait just a moment, please. Well, Jonesie waited about five minutes and then gave the bell a vicious ring. The boy answered the ring and asked Jonesie what he wanted. 'I want to know who rang me up,' said Jonesie. 'Nobody here,' said the boy, and he said he heard Jonesie swear as he rang off.

"Well, I gave him that telephone racket three times before he caught on. He was pretty hot, I guess, when he reached his office, but I had a reception for him there. I had telephoned to a lot of my life insurance friends that Jonesie wanted to take out a policy before leaving the city in the afternoon and advised them to send a man around to see him. There were two in the office when he reached it, and five more came in during the morning.

"Jones thought he was going to do a lot of work, too, but as a matter of fact he spent the day explaining that he didn't want any life insurance or anything else but a chance to tend to his own business. One of the agents finally let it out that I had recommended Jones as a good risk, and he rang me up at once. 'I've got enough,' he says. 'I'm willing to call it all square if you are. You've got the best of it, I admit,' he squalled, so I told him I was willing to call it off if he would remember not to hammer on my door hereafter when he was going by at 3 in the morning. He replied that he wouldn't rap at my door again if the hotel was afire, and so we called it off.

"Jones has beaten me out of a whole lot of sleep of late, but I guess I'm even, fellows. What do you think?" And De Smith leaned back in his chair and looked at himself admiringly in the mirror across the room.—Chicago Times-Herald.

A STOUT BACKBONE

Is as essential to physical health as to political consistency. For weakness of the back, rheumatism, and disorders of the kidneys, the tonic and dietetic action of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the one thing needful. The stomach is the mainstay of every other organ, and by invigorating the digestion with this preparation, the spinal column, and all its dependencies, are sympathetically strengthened. The dyspeptic and bilious will find it a pure vegetable stimulant and tonic.

BEWARE OF OINTMENTS FOR CATARRH THAT CONTAIN MERCURY,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MOTHERS.

We are asserting in the courts our right to the exclusive use of the word "CASTORIA," and "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," as our Trade Mark.

I, Dr. Samuel Pitcher, of Hyannis, Massachusetts, was the originator of "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," the same that has borne and does now bear the fac simile signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on every wrapper. This is the original "PITCHER'S CASTORIA" which has been used in the homes of the mothers of America for over thirty years. Look Carefully at the wrapper and see that it is the kind you have always bought, and has the signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on the wrapper. No one has authority from me to use my name except The Centaur Company of which Chas. H. Fletcher is President.

Only One!

Not more than five men or women in a thousand are free from some form of Kidney, Liver or Bladder trouble, which is certain to run into serious disease unless checked.

Stop and Think!

that there is but one known remedy for these troubles! Ask any druggist, physician or friend what it is, and he will tell you,

Warner's Safe Cure

This great remedy stands ABSOLUTELY "at the top," and is so acknowledged by the most advanced thinkers of the world. This suggestion is all you require!

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

A TWENTY-THREE MILLION DOLLAR CAPITOL BUILDING.

NEW YORK'S State capitol building has cost more money than any other structure in America, and it is by no means finished yet. The people of the State have thus far been taxed the stupendous sum of $22,250,000 for the mere building. Its maintenance is quite another item, costing upward of $100,000 a year. This building, with its porticos, occupies an area of three acres. The national capitol building at Washington covers an area of four acres and cost only $13,000,000. Seldom does the Legislature of New York adjourn without appropriating a sum of money, ranging from $100,000 to $1,000,000, for the carrying forward of the work. Into this insatiable vortex of jobbery enough money has thus far disappeared to have built ten state houses of magnificent design and material.

The match for this capitol project cannot be found among the historic churches and palaces of Europe, and it is doubtful whether the tombs of the Rameses dynasty, constructed to preserve the memory of Egypt's kings, cost as much as it has cost the people of the Empire State to have a headquarters for their business. The state house was begun in 1867. Since that time nine Governors have sat in the chair of New York. Nine Governors have attempted to do something with the incubus, and nine Governors have failed. The size and cost of the capitol are not its sole claims to notoriety. No public institution in the country has been so prolific of scandals. Occasionally the Legislature ordered an investigation into the way in which the work was being pushed ahead, and then another scandal was almost sure to be added to the list of those with which the history of the building is checkered. Inasmuch as some half a dozen architects have had to do with the construction of the capitol down to the present time, it is not at all surprising that the result has been a mixture of ideas that makes it difficult to determine just what particular style of architecture is most in evidence.

HINDOO CYNIC HERE.

Declares that the Women of the West Are Savages.

"The women of the West are savages. Will you tell me what is the difference between an Indian who puts war feathers in his hair and a woman who puts feathers and flowers in her hat?"

These words fell like a bombshell on the recent woman's congress at San

BRAMACHARIN BOBHABHISKSHU.

Francisco, says the Examiner, where their author had been coddled and lionized with the admiring deference which impressionable women are prone to pay to handsome young men who wear a strange garb and an air of romance and mystery.

To say that the women were startled when Bramacharin Bobhabhiskshu, the Hindoo hero, opened his vials of wrath upon them is putting it mildly. He said the congress was a humbug and the women were insincere. "You build fine churches," he said, "but merely through vanity. You go to church to display your clothes. The religious motive is lacking. You put fine organs in the churches, and the aim is to have the best and biggest organ, in order to draw the biggest crowd. These things are not so in India. Whatever is done by the Hindus is done in the spirit of religion and without the desire to show off."

It is safe to say that it will be a long time before the women of the congress again take up a wandering Oriental, however picturesque his garb may be.

The "typewriter girl" has been held responsible so long for all kinds of errors, either grave or ludicrous, that the imputation is no longer meant as a reflection upon the ability, but only a little pleasantry at her expense. But

MISS MARGARET WILLIAMS.

Miss Margaret Williams, of Trenton, N. J., recently made an error in transcribing which is both grave and ludicrous, and is by no means a pleasantry to those concerned. She has the unique distinction of being the first "typewriter" who, by the mistake of a single word, could bring about the nullification of a law or the recalling of a session of the Legislature. Miss Williams was called upon recently to write the draft of a proposed constitutional amendment to the lottery and gambling laws of New Jersey. By changing the word "prohibited" to "provided" she altered the intent of the whole law, and the mistake was not noticed until after the amendment had been passed upon by the Senate and become a law, and an extra session of the Legislature must be called to rectify the mistake. It is only fair to Miss Williams to explain how easily an error like this may occur in stenographic work, the characters for the words being so similar that the mistake might have happened to the most expert stenographer, only with results less serious.

A BRAVE GENERAL PROMOTED.

John R. Brooke, Who Won His Spurs in the Civil War.

The promotion of Gen. John R. Brooke to a major generalship, placing him third in rank in the army of the United States, was a deserved recognition of valor and faithfulness. Gen. Brooke is one of the ablest and most popular commanders in the army. He entered the military service as a volunteer in 1861, when he was 23 years old, and was with Hancock's gallant corps through all the hard fights of the Army of the Potomac from Bull Run to Cold Harbor, where he was wounded. His rank on entering the army was that of captain of volunteers, and when he retired it was brigadier general. His brave service through the civil war won for him the appointment of lieutenant colonel in the regular army and he was sent West to guard the frontier. His promotions came regularly until in 1888 he was appointed brigadier general, commanding the department of the Platte. He took an active part in the Sioux campaign of 1890-91, at Pine Ridge Agency, South Dakota.

1,800 Years After Death.

Whenever the pick used by one of the excavators at Pompeii gives forth a hollow sound upon striking the great bed of lava, care is immediately taken to open the cavity that is known to be near. Into this liquid plaster of Paris is poured. The cavity serves as a mould and the plaster soon hardens. When the lava has been removed the statue obtained usually proves to be that of a woman or man in the agonizing convulsions of death, the limbs contorted and the features drawn out of shape just as they were when he or she was overtaken by the flood of red-hot lava somewhere about eighteen hundred years ago.

The Duograph.

A new device has been brought out in France for enabling direct correspondence between blind persons and those who can see. It is called the "duograph." It is a kind of typewriter, which prints the letters in relief so that they are both visible to the eye and sensible to the touch. The whole mechanism is described as remarkably simple.

ABOUT A BOOM.

Started with a Half-Finished Mill and Ended with a Finished Wreck.

Some one had asked the ex-boomer from Oregon to describe the theory and practice of his late profession. "Every boom," he said, "has its pretext, which may range from a projected railroad to a salubrious climate, and its promoter, whose real object may be almost anything imaginable, but is generally a desire to buy or sell some particular piece of property, and booms are as various in inception and development as their pretexts and promoters.

"The most successful and far-reaching boom is a disturbance far beyond my powers of description. Capital and speculation are, however, the only vitally necessary elements for the creation of a small-sized boom, and it is possible that one experienced man may represent both of them and be wholly and directly responsible for a boom of considerable magnitude.

"I may cite as an example of such a boom my own experience with a sawmill which I had started to build for a neighbor of mine, a man of large experience in the lumber business, who died suddenly, leaving me in possession of a half-finished plant, of whose operation I knew absolutely nothing. On trying to sell I discovered that none of the other mills in the vicinity had been making money for some time, and that it would be impossible to find a purchaser for my property as it stood.

"Well, I had capital involved, and proceeded to speculate with every cent I possessed. I finished the mill, adding planers, lath, shingle and box-making machinery, and an electric light plant to the original plans, and began running day and night. With the first lumber sawed I constructed a spur to the mill from the railroad near by, built a large general merchandise store, a blacksmith shop, and a hotel, all of which I operated myself, and about fifty cottages which I rented to my employes. I also secured the establishment of a railroad, telegraph and express station, and a postoffice, and soon had a bustling little town started. I managed to find some employment for every man, woman and child that wanted it, and had more money in circulation in the county than the oldest inhabitant had ever before known of. To keep the mill going after the legitimate local demand for lumber was satisfied I began to stock new yards in the two nearest county seats, put up a fence all around my ranch, and built new barns, corrals, and sheds all over the place.

"At the end of three months after the mill had started running I had about exhausted my capital, but had gained a reputation that nearly sent me to the State Legislature that year, and, more to my purpose, had received several offers to incorporate or sell my business. The best of the offers I finally accepted, and transferred the whole layout to a number of moneyed men from the State capital for a price that gave me a net profit of $10,000.

"The following summer I spent abroad. On my return six months later the property was in the hands of a receiver and it was sold at auction in the following year for $6,000."—New York Sun.

Signs of Better Times.

"Times are certainly improving," remarked an old "print" at typographical headquarters one day last week. He had just struck town, had handed in his card to Secretary Marsh and was preparing to make a pan-handling round of the printing offices while looking for a sub sit, says the Detroit Free Press. A half dozen "waiters" who were present pricked up their ears at the remark and one of them asked:

"What makes you think so?"

"There's more of 'em on the road now than for several years past."

"But doesn't that indicate that more of them are out of work?"

"It would with other trades, but with printers it's just the other way. Think of the best times you ever knew in the printing business and then think of the number of printers that were on the road—carrying the banner. What? Why, of course. In those days tramp printers wore plug hats and tan kids and more than half of them had full dress suits."

"And the other half used to get their suits full regularly every time they cashed their strings," was the offertory of one of the older listeners. "But it's true, just as you say—there were more arrivals and clearances during the flush times than since the depression set in."

"And the harder the times the fewer printers on the road."

"What becomes of them?"

"They pick up other jobs."

"What, for instance?"

"I can't speak for others, but all last winter I was peeling potatoes in a St. Paul restaurant at $3.50 a week, and had sense enough to hang onto my job."

Measured by Music.

A learned scientist has recently shown how the velocity of the wind can be reckoned by noting the musical pitch of the sound given out when the wind blows across a stretched wire. The principal elements on which the calculation is based are the diameter of the wire and the temperature of the air. The length of the wire is immaterial, so long as it is not changed. Every variation in the wind's velocity is faithfully represented by the rising or falling of the pitch of the note sung by the wire.

Victoria's Great-Grandchildren.

The birth of a daughter to the Duke and Duchess of York brings the number of the Queen's great-grandchildren up to thirty. The English people are particularly pleased over the advent of the little maid, at this time of rejoicing in their domains. The three children of the Duke of York seem to assure the country of a direct line of descent, and there is widespread rejoicing thereat.

CASSIUS M. CLAY AND HIS ROMANCE.

ONE and a half miles west of the postoffice in White Hall, Ky., stands the $60,000 mansion of General Cassius Marcellus Clay, the great abolitionist, who fought a duel with Robert Wickliffe, killed Sl Turner with a bowie knife, carved Will Brown with the same weapon, making him an invalid for life, served through the Mexican war with distinction and acted as President Lincoln's Minister to Russia during the late war. The General named it "White Hall," and through the courtesy of the son of Will Brown, who was in the Postoffice Department, he succeeded in having this postoffice called after his famous home. The house was built while he was Minister to Russia, and is one of the largest and most commodious residences in Kentucky. The drawing-room is by far the largest south of Mason and Dixon's line, and on its walls are hung some of the choicest paintings by the most noted Russian, European and American artists. It is here that the venerable General is living with his child-wife, Dora Richardson, for whose benefit he is trying to get a pension from the United States Government.

His friend, Senator Lindsay, not long ago introduced a bill in Congress giving General Clay a pension of $100 per month in consideration of his services as a Mexican soldier. Although General Clay has been importuned frequently to apply for a pension, he has steadfastly declined to do so. He owned nearly 2,000 acres of the finest land in Madison County, and when his first wife, who was a Miss Warfield, of Lexington, secured a divorce from him he divided the land among his children. But he collects a nominal rent for each of the farms, and the home place, including White Hall, he reserved for his own use. It contains about 260 acres. A portion of it is in cultivation, but the most of it is in grass, on which the General raises the finest Southdown sheep in America. Each fall he ships his mutton to Eastern markets, and on several occasions he has sent mutton to England to grace the Queen's table.

MR. AND MRS. CASSIUS M. CLAY

General Clay was sued for divorce by his first wife. The General made no fight against Mrs. Clay, and the petition for absolute divorce was granted. Under ordinary conditions the wife has a lifetime interest in her husband's property in Kentucky, but it appears that in the General's case his present wife can surely hold an interest in his estate should he die first. It is to guard against her being unprovided for that the independent old soldier has finally agreed to apply for a pension.

The marriage of the "Sage of White Hall" to his 14-year-old house girl occurred on Dec. 13, 1894. There were many peculiar features which marked the wedding and made it one of the most remarkable marriages that ever occurred in Kentucky. About two years before the wedding Dora Richardson, accompanied by her mother and little brother, was caught on the railroad bridge which spans the Kentucky River at Valley View, by a freight train. Dora pushed her little brother off the track and saved him. She then clung to the trestle and saved herself, but her mother was killed before her eyes. The story of the tragedy and of the heroism displayed by Dora touched the heart of General Clay, and he determined to give the motherless girl a home. At that time he had in his employ a giant shepherdess, Mary Tooney, who he had imported from Scotland to care for his Southdown sheep. Mrs. Tooney at first was very kind to Dora, but within a year after she was taken into the household the child had to submit to severe treatment at the hands of the shepherdess. When General Clay heard of this he was wild with anger and he summarily discharged Mrs. Tooney and employed Dora's elder brother to care for the sheep.

When General Clay first proposed marriage to Dora she ran from him and went to the home of a married sister, crying. She did not want to return to White Hall, but when the General explained to her brother that he was in earnest; that he had chosen his first wife from an aristocratic family, and had found that marriage a failure; that he wished to marry again and to take his bride from the humble walks of life, as he believed that such a wife would give him that love and affection which he sought for in vain among those of nobler birth, her brother went to her and told her that the General was actually in earnest, and advised her that as she was an orphan it would be best for her to marry General Clay, notwithstanding that he was so high above her in social rank, and that there was such a disparity in their ages. The child, having always been treated kindly by the General, finally consented to become his wife, and a few months afterward it became generally known in the neighborhood that General Clay would marry Dora Richardson within two years.

But the General's son, Brutus J. Clay, heard of his father's engagement and tried to break it off. He called on his father and urged him not to take such a foolish step. The interview ended in the General driving his son from the house and telling him to never set foot on the place again as long as he lived.

The General says that Brutus then offered a reward of $500 to anybody who would steal Dora away so that his father could not marry her. When the General heard of this his old-time fighting blood was soon at boiling heat. He sent for Dora's brother to come into his library. He told him what he had heard Brutus was going to do, and instructed him to hire four fearless men who were not afraid to shoot and kill and report to him that afternoon. In the meantime the General went to Richmond, bought three Winchester rifles, two double-barreled shotguns and five large revolvers. He laid in a large supply of ammunition and returned home with his arsenal. He armed each of the men with a gun and a pistol and instructed them to shoot any suspicious person seen on the place. The General himself would not retire to bed to sleep, but would keep watch in his library, catching a nap now and then while sitting in his armchair.

The wildest reports were soon in circulation in the neighborhood, and it was not long till everybody in that end of Madison County had heard that "Cash" Clay, as he was called by the natives, had gone crazy and had an armed guard around his house, which had been instructed to shoot the first man that came on the place. Knowing the determination of the General, the neighbors were afraid to go near him, but his children sent a well-known minister to talk the matter over with him. He gave the man of God a careful hearing, but when he had finished the General told him that he had made up his mind to marry Dora Richardson, and he intended to do so.

The next day the General went to Richmond to get his license to marry the child, secured the services of a minister, and the next morning they were married. He found his bride an ignorant country girl. She could read a little, but could scarcely write her name. He employed a governess to teach her, and had a music teacher to give her lessons on that instrument. The governess, finding she could never teach her charge any of the higher accomplishments, abandoned the task. The General is now in his eighty-seventh year. He knows his children will not take care of Dora, therefore he wants a pension.

Obtaining Fresh Water.

Alexander Graham Bell's latest mechanical device is in the line of practical utility, like most of his inventions. It is intended for the fishermen who are frequently cut off from their vessels by fog, and lose their lives as frequently by lack of drinking water as by exposure. The invention consists of a glass cylinder or bottle, through the neck of which is a small rubber tube. The glass is submerged, and a brass cylinder acting as a bellows through the rise and fall of the waves, pumps the atmosphere into the submerged bottle. There it becomes condensed, and a supply of fresh drinking water is always to be obtained.

No man ever married a second time without the women saying he was mean to his first wife.

JOHN R. DOS PASSOS.

Father of a Financial Plan to Help the Farmers.

John R. Dos Passos, the father of the great credit foncier which, in his opinion, is to save the country by freeing all the farmers of debt, is a New York lawyer who is by no means as visionary or as impractical as some financiers try to make him out. Secretary Gage does not indorse his plan of "saving the country." But the brilliant Portuguese, whatever may be the failings of his present scheme, has engineered some very fairly successful financial matters on a large scale. For instance, there is the great sugar trust. The Havemeyers when they needed advice called in Dos Passos, and it was his brain that welded together the magnificent organization which has made so many millions for its owners. His fee is said to have been $500,000. He has been the consulting attorney in the reorganization of several of the largest railroad properties in the country. He has written at least one noted brochure entitled "The Law of Stock Brokers and Stock Exchanges," which shows forth much careful study of financial causation and the obscure laws that govern the wild movements of stocks. Before he became a corporation lawyer Dos Passos practiced criminal law and did well at it. His last criminal case was his defense of Edward S. Stokes. After that financiers over all the country sought his advice. His fees were enormous. Capitalists hung on his words. Then he took up corporation and constitutional law and mastered it and became one of the most desired and famous lawyers in New York. Mrs. Dos Passos is a native of Philadelphia. He is 52 years old and fought hard in the big war for the Union side of the dispute.

There Was One More.

The delivery clerk with the pink cheeks was fondling his blonde young moustache when a young woman stepped in front of him.

"Plaze," she said with a soft smile, "is there anny letthers here for paple by the name of Murphy?"

The young man with the pink cheeks stopped playing with his moustache and looked through a pile of papers.

"No," he said, brusquely, as he shoved them back into their pigeon holes again. "There's nothing here for the Murphys."

"Is there anything here for James Murphy?" persisted the maiden.

"No."

"Is there anything for William Murphy?" she pleaded.

"Nothing."

"Is there anything for Michael Murphy?" almost tearfully.

"Nix."

"Is there any——"

The young man with the pink cheeks deemed it high time to exhibit his powers of persiflage. And he did so.

"Madam," he said, raising his voice, "there is nothing here for Peter Murphy, or Paul Murphy, or Larry Murphy; Oscar Murphy's correspondents have forgotten him; Lewis, Samuel, Terence, Patrick, Thomas, Clarence Robert and Joseph Murphy are neglected by their distant relatives. Sadder still, there is not a single letter for Mary Murphy, nor so much as a postal card for Agnes, Bridget, Clarinda, Augusta, Ida, Ellen, Susan, Mamie or Gladys Murphy."

The young man with the pink cheeks paused and looked behind him for the applause of his fellows. But the maiden stood her ground, and softly said:

"Plaze, sor, I didn't hear ye mintion the name of Mortimer Murphy. Might there be anything for him, sor?"

Fireproof Paper.

Fireproof paper for writing and printing purposes is now manufactured in Berlin by a new patented process. Ninety-five parts of asbestos fiber of the best quality are washed in a solution of permanganate of calcium, then treated with sulphuric acid as a bleaching agent. Five parts of wood pulp, as used in paper factories, are added, and the whole is placed in the agitating box with an addition of lime water and borate of soda. After being thoroughly mixed, the material is pumped into the regulating box and allowed to flow out of the gate on an endless wire cloth, where it enters the usual paper making machinery. It is easy to apply water marks to this paper, which ordinarily has a smooth surface, which can be satin finished for writing purposes. Paper thus produced is said to resist even the direct influence of flame and remains uninjured, though subjected to a white heat.

Food and Odor.

Food that has little odor and food that readily absorbs odors should be placed at the bottom of the refrigerator. All foods with a strong odor should be kept on the top shelves.

STATUE OF CHOATE.

The Historic Jurist and Statesman to Be Honored.

The memory of Rufus Choate, the historic jurist and statesman, is to be honored with an appropriate monument in bronze. David C. French, the noted New York sculptor, has just completed a life-size statue of Choate, which is to erected in the newly built court house in Boston. The staute in the clay has been inspected by Joseph Choate, the distinguished nephew of the great man, and it is said that he has pronounced it a most admirable portrait, both in feature and figure. The statue depicts Mr. Choate in one of his characteristic attitudes. He is standing erect, one hand grasping the lapel of his Prince Albert coat, the other holding a number of pages of notes, from which he is speaking. The pedestal on which the bronze figure will rest is to be of marble, and the total height of pedestal and statue will be about fourteen feet. The monument is a gift to the city of Boston by some person who does not desire that his name shall be known. Rufus Choate was a native of Massachusetts and was born in 1799. He was a descendant of the old Puritan stock. He was educated at Dartmouth, studied law, and, like his nephew, devoted the best work of his life to its practice. As a lawyer he was pre-eminent. He wrote some memoirs that are still read, and he might have been great as a statesman had he had the ambition to pursue politics. His career as Congressman and Senator was remarkable in an era of great men. He died in 1859.

STATUE OF RUFUS CHOATE.

A FLOWING PETROLEUM WELL.

Powerful Explosive Is Lowered and Forces Out a Torrent of Oil.

Among the impressive oil region spectacles the shooting of an oil well always takes front rank. The well that is to be shot has been drilled to the oil producing strata of sand rock, and there the olly fluid is held in the pores of the rocky formation. In some instances the gas pressure is sufficient to blow the oil into the hole drilled in the rock, and no other means is required to get the oil to the top of the ground.

WHEN THE TORPEDO EXPLODES.

This is only in exceptional cases. The general way is to lower a long torpedo so as to pass inside of the casing, down to the bottom of the hole. The torpedo is a tin can of probably 10 feet in length. Inside the can the space is filled with nitro-glycerine. A percussion cap on the top of the can is arranged that the dropping of a weight, or go-devil causes the device to explode. The rock is rent over the bottom of the well, and a basin is formed which becomes a reservoir to pump from when the well is ready for that part of the business. The cut shows the torrent of oil that rushes from the subterranean depths when the torpedo or "shot" is exploded.

Acetylene.

"The Explosion and Detection of Acetylene in Air" is the title of a paper recently read before the Chemical Society; and as many persons are interested in this new illuminating gas, a short account of the results arrived at by this experimenter will not be out of place. A mixture of acetylene and air becomes explosive when as little as three per cent. of the gas is present, and the tendency to explode persists up to eighty-one per cent. This range is extraordinarily wide, and exceeds that of any combustible gas known.

Novelty in Headgear.

Aluminum helmets have not proved successful in the German army, the saving in weight being more than offset by the metal's storing heat, even to blistering the foreheads of the wearers.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR,
ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 6 1897

COMING THIS WAY.

The Los Angeles Express of July 29th has the following news relative to the building of a railroad which will in the near future develop into a potent factor in the affairs of Southern and Southeastern Inyo: "Mr. A. A. Dougherty, who is the youngest man engaged in building railroads in this country, has returned from New York, where he delivered $250.000 worth of bonds of the Randsburg Railway to the Rochester Trust Company and secured, as a result, the necessary funds for the construction of the line. This is a feat in financiering that would be hard to equal in these times of depression. The work of construction will begin at once commencing at Kramer station on the Santa Fe and Pacific. The line will be completed to Randsburg in ninety days' time, and then trains will be operated to the camp and the trade will be quadrupled with this city. What will be done when the road reaches that mining camp is another question. The projectors of the line deny that they have any intention of building to Salt Lake City, but they have among them men who are known to have made this latter enterprise a favorite plan for many years past, and as the entire project could be easily changed from the simply local one of building a little line to Randsburg to the formation of another link forming a new transcontinental route, there is reason to believe that if all favors, the long-talked-of road to Salt Lake may grow out of this modest little affair. It is stated by those who ought to know that while he was in the East Mr. Dougherty completed traffic arrangements with the Santa Fe which will be advantageous to all parties concerned."

If the Los Angeles trade with the Rand district will be quadrupled by the construction of a 26-mile road this way from Kramer, it can be increased ten fold by extending the line say 100 miles further. On an almost natural grade about 70 miles further north would bring the road to a central point in Panamint valley, tapping en route the Searles borax fields and the almost numberless mines of southern Argus and Slate ranges. In the Telescope range are a series of mining camps mainly known by those canyons which are of easy access and contain flowing water. At a distance of four to eight miles, these are (from the south northward, beginning at the base of Sentinel Peak): Gold [Redlands] Canyon, Mineral Hill, Pleasant Canyon, Happy Valley, Surprise [Panamint] Canyon, Hall's Canyon, Jail Canyon, Tuba Canyon and Wild Rose Pass, situate north of Telescope Peak. On the west side the Argus range stretches along, containing such well-known Districts as the Argus, Revenue, Snow Canyon and Modock. All these have passed the prospecting stage and contain almost numberless mining properties of known extent and value. Then, if Los Angeles possessed the great smelting works about which there has been so much talk and nothing done, a further extension of the road 25 miles northerly would tap the apparently inexhaustible "low-grade"—worth $50 per ton, with lead accounted at 5c per lb and silver at 70c per oz.—argentiferous galena ores of Cottonwood, known as the Lemoigne mines. The Kennedy antimony mine of Wild Rose, in great ledges containing from 50 to 70 per cent commercial metal, would be but six or eight miles from the track. A natural wagon road 30 miles (estimated) from Cottonwood would open to the world the Ubehebe copper mines, with ores from 15 to 40 per cent metal and $6 to $32 per ton gold—developed but unfortunately isolated mines.

So far no Los Angeles and Salt Lake railroad talk has projected a track through Inyo County, but this Randsburg enterprise bids fair to settle the question and determine upon what is actually the most feasible route for a through line. It is easy enough to get from the Santa Fe northward into either the Amargosa, Death or Panamint valleys, but generally a great wall of mountains extend east and west across the northern ends. The exception is near Cottonwood referred to. Townsend Pass divides the Telescope mountains and an eastern branch of the Inyo range; for a distance of 20 miles on either side of the summit the even grade runs less than 50 feet to the mile. This leads into Mesquite Valley, from which old emigrant and borax roads connect with Lost [Death] Valley, Furnace Creek and all the vast borax deposits lying west of the Amargosa Range [Funeral mountains]. From the Mesquite Valley named the route northeasterly is practicable through the rich mining districts of Southern Nevada and any part of Utah that the road may want to get to.

The President's special message to Congress says that the money of the country is all good, but he wants the whole financial business fixed up differently somehow—"at a less expense to the Government and the people." It has been evident for some time that the people are not The Government.

When the hegira to Klondyke sets in the opposite way fares and freights over the route will be cheaper, but if walking were possible there will be many a fellow to emulate the White Pine Dutchman—hoof it home and "learn dis d— fool somedings."

The United States appears to be about the only nation that hasn't a revolution on hand, if we except the revolt of the coal miners against the Hanna-Carnagie style of plutocrats.

Gevernor Budd has appointed Mrs. Phebe A. Hearst a Regent of the State University, vice Col. C. F. Crocker. The lady, widow of the late Senator George Hearst, has long evinced a strong interest in educational affairs, and the University of California is indebted te her in many ways. In 1891 she made provision for eight $300 scholarships for worthy young women, binding herself to pay that sum during her lifetime and providing for a perpetual fund after death. The qualifications for the scholarships are noble character and high aims, it being understood that without the assistance thus given the University course would in each case be impossible. Such benevolence has aided the cause of co-education materially, both in a practical and moral sense. In 1896 Mrs. Hearst's bounty was further exemplified by her offer to pay the expenses of a University agent to secure plans for university buildings by international competition. The best artists, architects and landscape gardeners in the world are now engaged in work preliminary to the great competition. To obtain these plans will cost in the aggregate $20,000. Furthermore, Mrs. Hearst offered $250.000 for the erection of a mining building, as one of the twenty-eight buildings in this suggested general plan of the ideal university, in honor of the deceased Senator Hearst. In the present year the lady has made donations of additional buildings to be provided for in the plans. For the proposed remodeling of the University, "to be the most magnificent edifice of its kind in the world," it is stated that a fund of about $4.000,000 has already been pledged by citizens of California, and the rest of the money will be raised by annual appropriations from the State treasury.

A New York paper recently wrote to the Governors of all the States and Territories for estimates of the present population. These reports have been carefully compiled and show that the total population of thfs country in round numbers is 78.000.000.

OFFICIAL.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

INYO MARBLE COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Inyo, county, California.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 27th day of July, 1897, an assessment (No 50) of Ten cents (10c) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the Corporation, payable immediately in United States Gold Coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 328, Phelan Block, San Francisco, California. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 28th day of August, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 20th day of September, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with cost of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. Office, Room 328, Phelan Block, San Francisco, California.

ESUS J. CARRASCO,
Executor of the estate of MANUELLA DIAZ, deceased.

Dated at Independence, Inyo Co., Cal, June 26, 1897.

The Supreme Court has practically "knocked out" the new road law, a fact by no means lamentable in interior counties of the State. It provided for the election of boards of trustees to take charge of all road matters, the law to go into effect sixty days after approval. This time fell on May 31 of this year. It also provided thet the election of trustees should take place on the last Saturday of May. By a strange fate this last Saturday fell on the 29th, or two days before the new law was to go into effect.

Orders have been given to count the money in the United States treasury. One hundred persons will be employed in the work, and it is estimated that three months' time will be required to handle the gold, silver and paper.

METAL MARKET.

Following are the quotations in New York, August 1:

Refined silver, per oz	$ .57⅛
Lead	3.50
Copper	11.12½
Tin	13.70
Brass, refined, in car lots	6⅛
Antimony	8½

Mrs. P. W. Forbes is visiting relatives at Bishop.

Alvah Conklin, wife and daughter have returned from Monache Meadows.

Mining transfers at Tuba insure a $40,000 deal to the lucky prospectors.

Relles Carrasco and Manuel Dias are among the Lone Piners in town to day.

Mrs. A. A. Neil of Black Rock has returned from a trip to the Whitney region.

John O'Day and Harry Cook started out Monday for fishing trip in the Sierras.

Jack Welch, present patriarch of Fish Springs Hill, is in town on the sick list.

Mrs. A. W. Eibeshutz and Master Eddie Eibeshutz were passengers on last Saturday's train for San Francisco.

From the way the Keynot case holds out lawyers and litigants will not have time to sail up the Yukon this season.

Sheriff Given, Treasurer Bunney, Jas. Moffitt and Mr. Edgerton report having enjoyed a splendid vacation in the big hills.

Attorney Snelen, Assessor Chalfant and Robt. O'Neal of Bishop were among the Bishop visitors to Independence this week.

Sam Gruber and Lew Wilder are doing annual assessment work on the Cleveland mine—the old Silver Sprout, Kearsarge District.

Horace and Jacob Hodge, Mr. Murphy, George Naylor, Normie Mairs, Charley Ross and Willie Davis set out for the Yosemite the other day.

W. L. Hunter and Reuben Spencer are doing some development work on old claims at "Hunter's ranch," a locality about 20 miles easterly from Cerro Gordo.

Oscar Hilton left Bishop on Saturday for the Klondyke. He was to sail from San Francisco yesterday for Dawson City, taking plenty of supplies with him. We wish him every success.

The marriage of Conductor Al. Stock of the C. & C. C. R., and Miss Jennie Sherman was announced for yesterday, at Reno. They've gone "on a honeymoon trip to California," accompanied by the very best wishes of everybody.

The local fruit crop is a wonder in its perfection and profusion, but growers say that prices to be obtained will not pay for picking and packing. There is something radically wrong about this, as there can be no doubt but that all of it could be consumed by the miners during the fall and winter, to the exclusion of imported stuff and a considerable saving in freights at least. Last spring, when the season's crop was assured, some place along the fruit belt should have set up a small but complete canning establishment. It would at least pay for the labor of a good many people, an important benefit of itself. The town, whether Lone Pine, Big Pine or Independence, that possesses sufficient enterprise and spirit to do this will make a good start on the right road to business and local importance. In the meanwhile all the good fruit that may be properly dried or evaporated can find a market after while, if is looked for.

Shotgun vs. Six-shooter.

A little, sociable-like shooting scrap which occurred at Lone Pine last Tuesday is occupying the attention of Justice of the Peace Davidson's court to-day. The parties are a Mexican named Antonio Savedra, a teamster, and H. Hargis, who has been for some time past working on the W. K. Miller ranch. They got into a squabble about the delivery and hauling of some hay, upon which Hargis came to town and gave utterance to divers sanguinary threats. Savedra got a shot gun and requested Hargis to get out of Richards' saloon, where he was, and fight it out. Hargis pulled a six-shooter and Savedra snapped a hammer of his gun. On the next short round both weapons went off, witnesses disagreeing as to which exploded first. Hargis' bullet lodged in a table, while Savedra's fine shot landed in Hargis' thigh, effecting a severe but not dangerous wound. Hargis wanted to continue business, but the Mexican got away and soon after came up here and delivered himself into custody. At a later hour we learn that his examination has been continued until to-morrow, awaiting news from the wounded.

TRAIN WRECK.

One of the costliest wrecks that has ever happened on the Carson & Colorado Railroad occurred to the north-bound train on Saturday a mile north of Rhodes. The train consisted of three box cars loaded with soda, a fast-freight, mail and express car and passenger coach. The train was pulled by engine No. 8, Louis Gobey, engineer, Neil Ward, fireman, and was in charge of conductor Al. Stock; Owen Gee, mail clerk.

The wreck was caused by the breaking of a carwheel of the forward truck of the second car from the engine. The first warning was a crash of breaking castings, and almost in an instant the pile-up was complete. With the exception of the rear trucks of the third car, all of the trucks of two soda cars, the fast freight and the mail coach were piled up in an indiscriminate mass under the rear of the mail coach, carwheels, axles and beams being smashed into a common mass. The road-bed was torn up for one hundred yards, the rails spread and ties scattered all around. Three cars were left flat on the road-bed, the front end of the mail coach was on the ground, the rear on a pyramid of wreckage. The forward trucks were torn loose from the passenger coach, but no further damage done to it. The mail coach is an utter wreck. The floor was completely riddled, and looked like a planing mill; splinters and shavings were strewn all around. The car is broken in two in the middle, but not a window was broken on the train.

There were nine passengers aboard the train, with five men in the train crew, and not a soul was injured. There were six people in the baggage coach, and that no one was hurt is nothing short of marvellous. Conductor Stock and Eddie Eibeshutz were thrown the full length of the car; mail clerk Gee was thrown under a table. A gentleman and a little girl were sitting in the door of the baggage coach, immediately over the pile of wreckage; the little girl was thrown against the door jam and her mouth bruised very slightly. Oscar Hilton was thrown against the door of the passenger coach and had his shoulder injured slightly. The hand of Providence can be plainly seen in the miraculous escape from death of all on board. The train had just emerged from a rocky canyon, with curves and a heavy grade. Had the wheel broken here the cars would have overturned and a fatality occasioned beyond a doubt. The train pulled out of Rhodes on time and was running about eighteen miles an hour, over a perfectly level and straight piece of track, when the accident happened. Had the train been running fast, as it usually does at this point to make up time, as is usually the case, or had the wheel broken on a curve, a fatal result could not have been avoided.

No possible blame attaches either to the management or employes. The road-bed was in fine condition, and the train was running on schedule time. It was one of those unavoidable accidents which will occur when least expected. At the same time it is a costly one for the C. & C. people. The baggage, mail and passengers were transferred to a box car at Soda Springs and brought into Hawthorne only an hour and a half late. A wrecking train was sent out from Hawthorne the same evening, and as the accident occurred on Saturday and there is no regular train on Sunday, the wreck was cleared away with no delay. Every person who was aboard the train will have something to be thankful for. The all-watchful hand of Providence alone prevented the death or maiming of all.

NEWS FROM BALLARAT.

BALLARAT, July 24 1897.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT—Miss Mabel F. Doss has left Ballarat for a vacation at Los Angeles and Santa Monica, but will return in time to take charge of the Ballarat school, which opens the first Monday in September.

Robt. Montgomery, one of the principal owners of the South Park Development Company, recently returned from San Francisco. He informs me that the company will soon have a cyanide milling plant in Pleasant Canyon.

C. H. Martin has the construction of the new mill under way, and it will soon be in working order.

A stage line has been established between Ballarat and Garlock, John Calloway proprietor. The stage leaves here every Tuesday morning and arrives at Garlock Wednesday evening, returning Friday evening.

W. J. Langdon has returned from Randsburg. He reports that the ore from his Big John claim in Pleasant Canyon assays $244 per ton.

C. H. Martin has just returned from Los Angeles.

CORRESPONDENT.

The new 5-stamp mill at Fish Springs, belonging to Messrs. Upton, Gilliam & Cole, is ready for operations and will start up next week. The owners will run through a small lot of their own ore and then crush some sixty or seventy tons for I. N. Rose. This is a home enterprise and the boys are to be congratulated, as there is no doubt of their ultimate success. Over $350,000 has been produced from that district since early days altogether, by arrastra process, an aggregate which will be steadily augmented.

The County Board of Education met at the Independence school house on Monday last, the members present being J. H. Shannon, Geo. F. Willis, Miss Maud Truscott, Mrs. Leora Rhine and County Superintendent Austin. The applicants for teachers' certificates are Mrs. S. W. Austin, Mrs. Bigelow, Miss Mary Cashbaugh, Miss Lea Darrah and Jas. and Bd. Dehy, all of whom have successfully passed all text studies. Transaction of general business of the session will begin to-day or to-morrow.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Al. Williams to Thos. B. Phelby—The "Oh be Joyful" and other claims at Tuba Canyon—$10.

ITEMS FROM MAMMOTH

MAMMOTH, July 28, 1897.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT—As a summer resort Mammoth surely cannot be excelled elsewhere in the State. Hunting and fishing are excellent, the weather beautiful and lovely bloomer girls by the score. Every day loads of new comers arrive and all add to the general hilarity of this lively camp.

Mrs. Buck and Mrs. McNamara of Benton and Miss Margie Shaw of Bishop were here on the 26th.

Ed. Clarke and family, Miss Agnes Ford, Wilfred Watterson and wife, Mrs. Matlack and Miss May Matlack are camped in a beautiful spot on the shore of Lake Mary.

The new row boat "Alice Mae" was launched to-day on Lake Mary. It was built at Bishop and is proving herself a tidy little craft.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Black of Bishop Mrs. J. R. Underhill, Miss Eva Underhill and Mrs. Preble of Mojave are camping at the Twin Lakes.

Borax King Searles and son, Dennis Searles, are among the late arrivals.

"Gentle" horses in Mammoth would certainly prove wild terrors in another community. One horse given to a lady last week, and warranted perfectly gentle by a young gentleman who looked as though he might speak the truth, kicked a box through the front door and out through the back, scared most of the people into fits and the young lady into a spasm. The other a day a "perfectly gentle" team was being driven by Miss Shaw and "it didn't do a thing to 'em" but kick over the traces, and but for the young lady's presence of mind would have caused a serious accident. N. B.—The Mammoth boys are not always to be depended on for horseflesh.

Among the latest arrivals are Robert O'Neal, Brad Collet and John Collins, Jr. Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Welsh and daughter and Frank Rickey were up from Long Valley yesterday. Mr. Chittenden returned from San Francisco via Fresno last evening. A party of men came over from Fresno, with hunting dogs, deer and bear hunting. Bears quite plentiful.

A great many things are being planned for our future amusement and we will send in accounts next week.

Hurrah for Mammoth—the jolliest place going.

BLOOMER GIRL.

A train of ten cars was wrecked on the Central Pacific near Reno last week. The only victims were five Piute Indians, and the rest of the tribe regard the matter as a providential inhibition against coming to California to pick hops.

Editor Mulholland is sojourning for a time in San Francisco on the advice of his physician. Any party or parties who may want to know 'who wrote that article" will please wait till he gets back. P. S.—Subscriptions promptly received, at the usual rates.

"Last summer one of our grand children was sick with a severe bowel trouble," says Mrs. E. G. Gregory of Fredericksburg, Mo. "Our doctor's remedy had failed; then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which gave very speedy relief." For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

The Cuban patriots are said to be discourteously hanging around Havana, and Weyler hasn't reported any decisive victory for several days.

Cremation In England.

The report of the council of the Cremation Society of England for 1896 shows that 137 cremations were carried out at Woking during the year as compared with 150 in 1895. The decrease is not important, as the figures for 1896 still show a material advance on any previous year, 1895 excepted. The following table of the cremations at Woking from the commencement of operations will show the growing popularity of the disposal of bodies by incineration:

1889	1890	1891	1892	1893	1894	1895	1896
46	54	99	104	101	125	150	137

It has to be remembered that three crematories are now open in England and Scotland besides that belonging to the society at St. John's, near Woking—namely, at Manchester, where 52 cremations took place during 1896; at Glasgow, where there were 11 cremations, and at Liverpool, where 2 cremations have been performed.—Westminster Gazette.

A Hopeless Case.

Carlyle was terribly bored by the persistent optimism of his friend Emerson. "I thought," he said, "that I would try to cure him, so I took him to some of the lowest parts of London and showed him all that was going on there. This done, I turned to him, saying, 'And noo, man, d'ye believe in the deevil noo?' 'Oh, no!' he replied. 'All these people seem to me only parts of the great machine, and on the whole I think they are doing their work very satisfactorily.' Then," continued the sage, "I took him doun to the hoose o' commons, where they put us under the gallery. There I showed him 'ae chiel getting up after anither and leeing and leeing.' Then I turned to him and said, 'And noo, man, d'ye believe in the deevil noo?' He made me, however, just the same answer as before, and I then gave him up in despair."

Diet and Hair.

The relation of the diet to the hair has been tested by good authority. A diet consisting of beef, starchy materials and milk causes atrophy of the roots and falling of the hair. Probably no article of diet nourishes the hair so well as oats. A bald headed Scotchman who takes his porridge regularly is a rarity. The poorest diet for the hair is milk. It is claimed that the loss of hair as the result of fever is largely due to the habit of feeding the patient almost exclusively on milk diet, and it will be interesting to note the cases where those having fine heads of hair are known to live principally upon vegetable and grain foods.

"A BUNDLE OF NERVES."

This term is often applied to people whose nerves are abnormally sensitive. They should strengthen them with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. After a course of that benign tonic, they will cease to be conscious that they have nervous systems, except through agreeable sensations. It will enable them to eat, sleep and digest well, the three media for increasing tone and vigor in the nerves, in common with the rest of the system. The mental worry begotten by nervous dyspepsia will also disappear.

It is presumed there are places from which residents do not want to go to spend the summer.

THE LITTLE OLD SHOE.

It is only a tiny shoe
That she touches with tender care,
A cunning little bit of a thing
That a baby used to wear.
And she gently raises it to her lips
And lovingly holds it there.

It is worn and faded and old,
But it brings up the happy past.
She sadly sighs as she thinks of the joys
That were too sweet to last.

In fancy she sees a little child
As it gambols upon the floor.
An elflike creature with golden hair
Is cooing a baby song once more,
And a tear drops down on the tiny shoe
That the beautiful dream child wore.

"Ah, well," she sighs to herself,
"'Tis, alas, the will of the fates!
I used to be able to wear this shoe,
But now I take number eights."
—Pearson's Weekly.

ANIMALS AND MUSIC.

A Strange Experiment Made In a Zoological Garden.

A violinist was playing various airs before the cages of the animals. The bow, which had been passing backward and forward half drowsily, took up a gait that would have distanced one of the deer in the pen by the buffaloes' yard. Then there was a transformation scene in the home of the lioness as rapid and as complete as that of the tune. The cubs went into ecstacies. They rolled about, jumped, fell over one another, raced over their mother's recumbent body, and danced unrebuked on her head. They ceased their tantrums only with the ceasing of the music.

Then they gathered at the front bars of the cage again and silently and pathetically pleaded for more. Their plea was successful, and in response to the delicate flattery conveyed by their manner the player gave the lullaby once more. They simply sat and listened to it as silently as they had at the first. The transition to the jig music was once more made speedily. The first note of the lively air had barely left the violin before its riotous contagion had once more caught the cubs. They rollicked and rolled about and stopped only when the professor, fearing to tire their little limbs, took his bow from his fiddle and told them they had danced enough for debutantes.

The hyena is an uncanny brute. His very appearance goes a great way toward bearing out charges of graveyard robbery brought against him. He has no music in his soul nor room for any. Sweet sounds are to him so antipodal to everything in his nature that they inspire him with nothing but fear, and the most abject fear at that. When Professor Baker tried to interest the two skulking hyenas in his performance on the violin, they began trembling visibly at the first note's utterance, and then as the music swelled they sought the farthermost side of their prison and tried their best to squeeze their ungainly bodies through the bars to escape the melody.—Philadelphia Times.

The Political Handkerchief.

There has just been sold by auction in France the complete set of an old newspaper which was probably unique. It was called the Mouchoir de Poche Politique (Political Pocket Handkerchief) and was published in 1831.

The proprietors hit upon the idea of printing it on cheap cotton stuff for the purpose of evading the high paper duty. The complete collection consisted of 144 numbers—just a gross of pocket handkerchiefs—for it is evident from the title that the publishers believed the newspaper would serve two purposes.

The price was 3 pence—3 shillings per dozen—not a high price to pay for news, articles, theatrical criticisms and a pocket handkerchief combined.

Unfortunately the cotton required too much ink, and the scheme had to be abandoned.—London Globe.

Larding Pork.

In larding with pork the fattest piece procurable should be bought (lean salt pork is not available for any use) and the strips always cut from that part between the streak of lean and the rind. This is the only portion firm enough for the purpose. The bits should then be laid in ice water to become crisp before using.—New York Post.

Catch Fish With Wheels.

A curious plan for catching fish is used on the Columbia river. A number of wheels are set up in the middle of the stream, which, as they turn round, catch up the fish and cast them into troughs by the river banks. The salmon are then tinned and sent all over the world. As much as five tons' weight of fish a day has thus been taken.—Kansas City Star.

Between Carthage and Stislingville, in Jefferson county, N. Y., there is a stretch of country where the sand drifts like snow, making great banks and blinding the eyes of those who look up wind. It is a desolate, barren region, where the soil is only as deep as the roots of the grass.

Who will get it?

Schilling's Best tea is not only pure but it is-----?-----because it is fresh-roasted.

What is the missing word?

Get Schilling's Best tea at your grocer's; take out the Yellow Ticket (there is one in every package); send it with your guess to address below before August 31st.

One word allowed for every yellow ticket.

If only one person finds the word, he gets one thousand dollars. If several find it, the money will be divided equally among them.

Every one sending a yellow ticket will get a set of cardboard creeping babies at the end of the contest. Those sending three or more in one envelope will receive a charming 1898 calendar, no advertisement on it.

Besides this thousand dollars, we will pay $150 each to the two persons who send in the largest number of yellow tickets in one envelope between June 15 and the end of the contest—August 31st.

Cut this out. You won't see it again for two weeks. B2

HOW FEAR WAS BANISHED.

George Kennan's Method for Overcoming His Natural Timidity.

"When I was 17 or 18 years of age," said Mr. Kennan, "I went as a telegraph operator to Cincinnati. I had become so morbid and miserable by that time that I said to myself one day, 'I'm going to put an end to this state of affairs here and now. If I'm afraid of anything I'll conquer my fear of it or die. If I'm a coward I might as well be dead, because I can never feel any self-respect or have any happiness in life, and I'd rather get killed trying to do something that I'm afraid to do that to live in this way.' I was at that time working at night, and had to go home from the office between midnight and 4 o'clock in the morning. It was during the civil war, and Cincinnati was a more lawless city than it has ever been since. Street robberies and murders were of daily occurrence, and all of the 'night men' in our office carried weapons as a matter of course. I bought a revolver, and commenced a course of experiments upon myself. When I finished my night work at the office, instead of going directly home through well-lighted and patroled streets, I directed my steps to the slums and explored the worst haunts of vice and crime in the city. If there was a dark, narrow, cutthroat alley down by the river that I felt afraid to go through at that hour of the night I clenched my teeth, cocked my revolver and went through it—sometimes twice in succession. If I read in the morning papers that a man had been robbed or murdered on a certain street I went to that street the next night. I explored the dark river banks, hung around low drinking dives and the resorts of thieves and other criminals, and made it an invariable rule to do at all hazards the thing that I thought I might be afraid to do. Of course I had all sorts of experiences and adventures. One night I saw a man attacked by a highwayman and knocked down with a slungshot, just across the street. I ran to his assistance, frightened away the robbers, and picked him up from the gutter in a state of unconsciousness. Another night, after 2 o'clock, I saw a man's throat cut, down by the river—and a ghastly sight it was, but although somewhat shaken I did not become faint nor sick. Every time I went through a street that I believed to be dangerous, or had any startling experience, I felt an accession of self-respect.

"In less that three months I had satisfied myself that while I did feel fear I was not so much daunted by any undertaking but I could do it if I willed to do it, and then I began to feel better.

"Soon after this time I went on my first expedition to Siberia, and there, in almost daily struggles with difficulties, dangers and sufferings of all sorts, I finally lost the fear of being afraid which had poisoned the happiness of my boyhood."—Atlantic Monthly.

Finnigin to Flannigan.

Superintindint wuz Flannigan;
Boss av the siction wuz Finnigin;
Whiniver the kyars got offen the thrack
An' muddled up things t' th' divil an' back,
Finnigin writ it to Flannigan,
Afther the wrick wuz all on again;
That is, this Finnigin
Repoorted to Flannigan.

Whin Finnigin furst writ to Flannigan,
He writed tin pages—did Finnigin,
An' he tould jist how the smash occurred,
Full minny a tajus, blunderin' wurrd
Did Finnigin write to Flannigan
Afther the cars had gone on agin,
That wuz how Finnigin
Repoorted to Flannigan.

Now Flannigan knowed more than Finnigin—
He'd more idjucation—had Flannigan;
An' it wore'm clane an' complately out
To tell what Finnigin writ about
In his writin' to Muster Flannigan.
So he writed back to Finnigin:
"Don't do sich a sin agin;
Make 'em brief, Finnigin!"

Whin Finnigin got this from Flannigan
He blushed rosy red—did Finnigin;
An' he said: "I'll gamble a whole month's pa-ay
That it will be minny an' minny a da-ay
Befoore Sup'rintindint, that's Flannigan,
Gits a whack at this very same sin agin
From Finnigin to Flannigan
Repoorts won't be long agin."

* * * * * * *

Wan da-ay on the siction av Finnigin,
On the road sup'rintinded by Flannigan,
A rail give way on a bit av a curve
An' soms kyars went off as they made the swerve.
"There's nobody hurted," sez Finnigin,
"But reports must be made to Flannigan."
An' he winked at McGorrigan,
As married a Finnigin.

He wuz shantyin' thin, wuz Finnigin,
As minny a railroader's been agin,
An' the shmoky ol' lamp wuz burnin' bright
In Finnigin's shanty all that night—
Bilin' down his repoort, was Finnigin!
An' he writed this here: "Muster Flannigan:
"Off agin, on agin, Gone agin.—Finnigin."
—S. W. Gillilan, in Atlanta Constitution.

Tedious Work of Old Bookmakers.

During the twelfth and thirteenth centuries monks frequently isolated themselves from the world and reproduced the Bible in illuminated manuscript. The work was necessarily slow and in no instance was it accomplished in less than thirty-five years. Guido de Jars was a producer of these illuminated manuscripts and a beautiful specimen of his work was sold along with the books of Sir. W. Burrell in 1790. This copy of the Bible had occupied half a century in its production. A note in the beginning of the manuscript in Jars' handwriting indicates that he began his task in 1244 and did not conclude it till 1294.

Remarks of the Envious.

"You say that Bronson's overworked and is going away for a rest. Why, he hasn't been in his office twice during the last six months."

"Yes, but he's just succeeded in marrying off the last of his five homely daughters."—Cleveland Leader.

Cannibalistic Tendencies.

"Who is that young fellow?"

"That's Jim Dowling, better known as 'Cannibal.'"

"Why cannibal?"

"His father is a retired missionary and Jim lives on him."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

HE is a young doctor and a surgeon on board one of the small gunboats placed on a great African lake. Fresh-colored still, though slightly tanned by exposure to the lake winds, with merry, Irish eyes of blue gray, a square-cut jaw and obstinate chin, a long upper lip, a little whisker at the temples and short wiry black-brown hair. Like many men of his class, he is a potential Darwin, and, having no means to travel and study natural history, has entered the navy as a surgeon. He has landed on the shores of the lake for a day's shooting, hoping to get an elephant at least, but meantime content to study sunbirds. Let us in imagination enter his mind, see through his eyes what he saw and lay bare his thoughts.

Grass! a forest of grass, with stout, knotted stems six or eight feet high, and abundant leaves starting from every joint. Each stem ends in a drooping plume of ripened seed. As the doctor forces his way through the tangled herbage and cane-like stalks the seeds shower down upon him, each one steadied in its descent by its long feathery stipule. The seeds are sharp pointed and barbed at the ends, so they pierce their way through his khaki clothing easily and scratch the perspiring flesh beneath. This raises to exasperation the discomfort already felt to be well-nigh unbearable, for the doctor's face is now the color of raw beef from the stifling heat and the frightful exertion of forcing his way through such a thicket of grass, and his hands are scratched and cut by contact with the razor-edged leaves. His Terai hat is constantly being dragged off his head and it is all he can do to carry his gun and elbow his way through the obstructing herbage, protecting his face as well as possible with the left hand. So he is in an ill temper and cannot stop to notice the weaver birds of flame color and black, the extraordinary stick insects (exactly simulating stalks of grass) and the green, leaf-like mantises which throng the dense brake on either side. He is after bigger game. The most experienced of his boys pioneers him through the stifling grass jungle, another boy with a second rifle follows behind. The idea is "elephants," elephants having been reported hereabout the previous day, when suddenly (they have reached a space where the grass is a little drier, a little less dense) the pioneer "boy" comes doubling back on his master with every gesture expressive of "Hush!" The doctor stops, mops his boiling face (thankful for the momentary halt) and asks inquiringly: "Elephants?" "No," says the negro in a panting whisper, "Lion! There, there; no, not there. You see that ant hill? Well, climb on to its side and you will see the lion lying in a clear space just beyond. A male lion, truly; its body is nearly white and its mane is black."

"SOME GREAT YELLOW OBJECT IN THE AIR ABOVE HIM.

With Express rifle at full cock, the doctor advances gingerly through the interlaced grass, bent nearly double, keeping the muzzle of the gun directed straight before him and shields its sensitive trigger from the intrusive grass stems. The ant hill is reached; he clambers to its sloping side. "Good God, the boy's right. What a beauty! And asleep, too!" But something in the doctor's coming has aroused the lion, not ten yards away; aroused him partially, for there is a sudden movement. He raised the great head set in a collar of yellow, brown, black mane; slowly the dim nictitating membrane passes over the yellow eyes, but as they are focussing to meet his own gaze the doctor fires, fires precipitately (his position on the sloping ant hill is insecure), wounds the lion somewhere, somehow, but does not kill him. The beast gives a sharp explosive roar, seems to jump into the air with all four feet and then in three bounds has crashed off into the grass jungle. Silence. "Well, I'm a muff!" thinks the doctor. "He wasn't ten yards away and I didn't kill him dead! I don't know quite where I hit him; in the chest, I think. But he can't be far away and I must finish him off." He descends from the ant hill into the clear trampled space where the lion had been lying. At the spot where the beast had made its first bound into the dense grass hedge there is a great squirt of blood over the tangled greenery—the dark crimson liquid still drips from leaf blade to leaf blade. "Ah! thought so; he must be pretty badly hit."

Two black faces, with starting eyes and anxious grins, now cautiously peer around the ant hill. The doctor, raising his head, recognizes his boys and beckons them down. The three converse in whispers. The situation is explained—how the lion was wounded, the direction in which he bounded away. The boys urge caution. "Lion plenty fierce. Mkango mkall nditu. Master must take care; better climb tree and look all around—not go into grass." But there is no tree anywhere near. A boy hoists himself to the slender summit of the ant hill and reports that he sees the grass moving in the direction whither the lion had withdrawn—moving as though a stationary animal were shaking it with convulsive throes (all of which is explained more by gestures than by words). The doctor, clambering up beside the boy, thinks he can descry (as the grass stems bow and droop before some writhing object) the lion's waving tail and a yellow-gray haunch. He fires, descends from the ant hill to reload. * * * A rush comes through the grass, a deafening roar, some great yellow object in the air above him * * * momentarily * * * dark against the sky * * * yellow eyes * * * (insensibility).

"'Click clock, click clock, click clock' * * * wonder what that funny sound is * * * am I in a train? No, it is the engines of the steamer—or is it the pulse beating in my temples? They have been asleep, and in broad daylight, with the blue sky above me and in the broiling sun! How foolish! But no—it must be something more. I know there has something happened—let me think * * * the lion, of course * * * a lion jumped at me. Then I must be wounded? Let's see" (raises himself painfully on his right arm) * * * "My God! a pool of my own blood * * * my left arm has no feeling * * * chewed by the lion, hand almost detached, rest of arm a mass of blood, muscle, bone and khaki * * * Oh, God! I'm going to die—can't live—he has torn open my stomach * * * that must be the pancreas. I'm like a butcher's shop.' (Whimpers. A blubbering sound attracts his attention.) "Hullo! you here, Juma? Plucky chap; thought you'd have cut and run. Where's Saldi? Eh? Speak louder. I'm deaf * * * Oh, gone to gunboat; quite right. * * * What? the lion?" (turns his head slightly) "there, still living; looks pretty sick too." (The lion is lying four yards away, partly on his side, one crippled forepaw turned back, the other outstretched and the great head resting on it, eying the men with solemn yellow eyes no longer fierce, the pupil shrunk to a pin-point. With each convulsive shudder of the lion's body the blood pool round him widens slightly.) "By heavens, if I've got to die, I'll die like a man, and he shall go first. Who can tell? He might recover and hurt the boy. See here, Juma" (to Juma, who is supporting his back), "be very gentle, take a cartridge out of my belt, put it in the rifle * * * so; now * * * ..... mind my arm * * * now, give me the rifle in my right hand and come between my legs * * * so—stoop very low down, like that. Now I'm going to rest the rifle on your shoulder and take aim. Keep very still. I won't hurt you * * * keep still * * * I'll aim just below the brute's eyes." (A minute pause. Bang! Doctor falls back fainting. Lion stretches out his head three times with spasmodic upward movement, the tail and the limbs—all but the crippled one—stiffen, the claws stand out from their sheaths and beast dies.)

"Juma, is that you? Water, how delicious! more—and on my forehead * * * so * * * what a brick you are! Upon my word, I'd like to leave you something, Juma. You must tell them that I said so, you know, for sticking by me. God bless you! Is the lion dead?" (The sobbing boy nods "Yes.") "Well, then, I must die too. I'm enough of a doctor to know that. Don't cry. Tell them I bore it like a man. But it's beastly hard! Who'd have thought my day's shooting would have ended like this?" (Whimpers.) "Beastly hard. I'm so young, and I've done so well up to now * * * and there's mother. Who will break it to her? She'll never get over it * * * and Lily * * * and, damn it all, I can't even send them messages! How can one tell such things to a black boy? S'pose I'm dying primarily from the shock * * * know I'm dying somehow—can't raise my head to look * * * Mother! Mother! * * * What rot to go on like that, as if it could do any good! * * * Now, listen. Ine ndirini amai, ndi mlongo, Iwe— Oh, God! How can I tell him? It's all slipping away from me. * * * For the blood is the life. Where have I heard that? That blood is the life * * * slipping away—slipping away * * * I must be in a boat, it is so soothing; up and down, up and down; so restful." (Sighs gently. Dies.)—Sir H. H. Johnston, in the Saturday Review.

THE BEST HAND.

It Was Held by an Outsider, and It Beat an "Ace Full."

"Say," said the drug clerk to his friend at the soda water fountain, "I ran against a play last night that made me think that I was the unluckiest man that ever drew a card."

"What was it?" asked the man at the fountain.

"Why, I had an ace full beat by another full. I'll tell you how it happened. You know we have a quiet little game over here on Dearborn street nearly every Saturday night. Well, last night we got into a five handed game. There were Julius, a chattel mortgage man, in whose office we were playing; a real estate man, a clerk for a bicycle firm, a lawyer and myself. Well, it was a small game—2 cent ante and a 50 cent limit. Along about 12 o'clock I opened the pot on a pair of aces. The lawyer raised me half a dollar, and Julius stood the raise. Of course I had to stand it too. I was the first to draw cards. I drew three cards. I thought I was pretty lucky when I picked up an ace and a pair of tens, making me an ace full. The lawyer, who had raised me on three queens, drew down to his hand and caught a pair of sevens, which made him a queen full. Julius asked for one card and made a spade flush.

"Well, I bet a check on the go, the lawyer raised me another half dollar, Julius called the raise and I raised back. We raised each other till we got about $7 in the pot. Just then the janitor of the building appeared on the scene. He had been out attending a wedding and happened in at this rather unseasonable hour. He was pretty well loaded with some kind of Scandinavian wine. He was good and ugly. It was a great surprise to him to see a game of cards going on in the building over which he had control, and he knew that if the facts ever came to the ears of the owner of the building there would be a janitor looking for a job.

"Now, what do you suppose that fellow did? Why, he just walked over to that table, kicked it over and sent the cards and chips flying in all directions. Then he told us to get out, and to do it quickly; that he would call the police and have us pinched.

"We got out and hunted up a small room in a hotel to continue the game. When we got settled down again, I made a kick for the pot on the last hand. I told the boys that I had an ace full and that there wasn't another full could beat it. Fat old Julius spoke up and said: "Oh, yes, there was. Vat do you t'ink of a janitor full?"—Chicago Tribune.

A Story of the Petersburg Mine.

General Horace Porter tells the following anecdote of the explosion of the Petersburg mine in his "Campaigning With Grant," in The Century: A surgeon told us a story, one of the many echoes of the mine affair, about a prisoner who had been dug out of the crater and carried to one of our field hospitals. Although his eyes were bunged and his face covered with bruises, he was in an astonishingly amiable frame of mind and looked like a pugilistic hero of the prize ring coming up smiling in the twenty-seventh round. He said: "I'll jest bet you that after this I'll be the most unpopular man in my regiment. You see, I appeared to get started a little earlier than the other boys that had taken passage with me aboard that volcano, and as I was comin down I met the rest of 'em a-goin up, and they looked as if they had kind o' soured on me and yelled after me, 'Straggler!'"

KIDNEY TROUBLES

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I have been a great sufferer from Kidney trouble; pains in muscles, joints, back and shoulders; feet would swell. I also had womb troubles and leucorrhœa. After using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Blood Purifier and Liver Pills, I felt like a new woman. My kidneys are now in perfect condition."—MRS. MAGGIE POTTS, 324 Kauffman St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"My system was entirely run down, and I suffered with terrible backache in the small of my back, and could hardly stand upright. I had no appetite. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I have gained fifteen pounds, and I look better than I ever looked before."—MRS. E. F. MORTON, 1043 Hopkins St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

LILLIAN CRIPPEN, Box 77, St. Andrew's Bay, Fla., says:—"Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I had suffered many years with kidney trouble. The pains in my back and shoulders were terrible. My menstruation became irregular, and I was troubled with leucorrhœa. I was growing very weak. I began the use of Mrs. Pinkham's medicine, and the first bottle relieved the pain in my back and regulated the menses. It relieved the pain quickly and cured the disease."

Sieves Are Useful.

A proper assortment of sieves, when at hand, come into use almost every day in the year, and the owner wonders how he ever got along without them. They will sort and "size" various articles, beans, peas, grain, etc., and will clean the dirt out of many farm products. They will take out the coarsely-cracked corn for the older fowls, and separate the finer parts for the chicks, and so one might go on enumerating their conveniences.

Sieves are easily made. Get wire-cloth with mesh running from coarse to fine, and saw sections from grocery boxes for frames, on which to tack the wire cloth. Nail a small strip of wood over the edges and the sieve is complete. The cut shows a deep sieve with an arrangement for "sizing" an article into three or more grades. The sieve in the position indicated by the dotted lines is permanently fastened in place, and is very coarse in mesh. Below are two sliding frames with meshes finer and still finer. Thus with one shaking three or ever four, assortments can be made.

Cross Breeding Doesn't Pay.

The combination of well-established breeds each grown for a distinct purpose, is always a failure, as the prepotency of each breed neutralizes the other, and thus produces a mongrel that is quite as likely as not to reproduce the least favorable rather than the most favorable characteristics desired. Breeding pure-bred animals to grades is always a good plan, for there is no prepotency in the grade, that having been destroyed in the first cross. But even in this breeding it is necessary for the best results to have the pure-bred male of the same breed that was used to make the grade on which it is to be crossed. If the grade is a half-bred Jersey or a half-bred Holstein, for example, the second cross on it with a pure-bred male of the same breed will make a high grade or three-quarters of a full blood, and often nearly as valuable for milk or butter production as if it were a full-bred animal.

Lifting Jacks for Vehicles.

The very simplest form of a wagon jack is shown in Figure 1. It is simply a board six inches wide, and of the proper length, with two notches sawed out near the top, as shown above. For light wagons, one man can use this jack very easily, but for heavy wagons, assistance is required. The one in Figure 2 is cheap, strong and convenient. The part a is made from a two-inch plank of some tough wood, and is two and one-half feet long. The lever, m, is three and one-half feet long and should be made from a tough stick 3x4 inches square, dressed to the form shown. The retaining rod, g, may be two pieces of No. 8 annealed wire. The upper end fastens in the serrated edge on the upper side of the lever. This will be found a most serviceable jack and will easily support half a ton weight.—American Agriculturist.

Eggs and Prices.

No matter how fresh the eggs may be that you send to market, the reliable merchant, if you are unknown to him, will "candle" them! that is, he will test them by looking through the eggs in a dark place at a strong light, and should he find only one of them that is stale, your whole lot will be graded accordingly. Nothing is so affected by suspicion as an egg, and the only way to secure the highest prices is to disarm all suspicion by shipping no eggs to market except such as are known by you to be strictly fresh. Once let a merchant discover that he can depend on you, and you will have no difficulty in securing even more than the regular price, for strictly fresh eggs are salable at all times, and at special prices for choice lots.—Poultry Keeper.

Growing Onion Sets for Sale.

In every neighborhood a good business might be made if some one would fit a bed and grow onion sets for sale to his neighbors. Comparatively few farmers have the small onion bed that is so convenient for the housewife to go to when she needs something more to supply the table properly with vegetables. Most farmers after a few trials find that the small onion bed costs more labor to weed it than will buy the onions it could grow. It is not so where onion sets are planted. They cost more than the seed to begin with, but the labor of cultivation is so much lessened that they are much the cheapest way to grow onions on a small scale.

Training the Calf.

The young calves should not be turned out before the middle of June. When ready to turn them out, have a strong head halter for each one, and lead them out to and from the pasture. They will soon learn to follow and become very docile with such training. In selling Jerseys, we always say that the cow can be led, and it adds several dollars to her value. Near the city, where family cows are in demand, at good prices, a cow that can be led out and tethered on the lawn is worth a great deal more than one that can not be thus managed. With bulls, especially Jersey bulls, put a ring into his nose, when four months old, and lead him with a stout hickory staff. The bull can be early taught to lead, and he should be gradually made to cut the feed and pump the water for the stock. A bull so managed is safer and makes a better breeder.—The American.

Clover Growing in the West.

Time was when Western farmers did not care to do anything to improve the fertility of their soil, which they thought was inexhaustible. But decreasing crops have turned their attention to better modes of manuring and to increased growth of clover. This is especially true where stock growing and dairying have superseded the exclusive growing of the earlier settlement. Clover is especially adapted to the Western farmer, because corn, which he always has grown, is only an imperfect ration. It is too largely carbonaceous and needs more nitrogenous nutrition. Nothing better supplies this than clover, nor do any crops better supplement each other in farm rotation than do clover and corn.—American Cultivator.

A Three-Horse Evener.

In reply to numerous requests for a three-horse evener, Orange Judd Farmer gives the accompanying illustration as perhaps the simplest and best of any that have been used hitherto, since in this arrangement each horse must do his full part of the work or show at once that he is shirking. The point of attachment to the plow or load must be made exactly one-third of the distance from the point of attachment of the double and single whiffle-trees, to give each horse an equal share of the work. To make a four-horse evener, attach a double whiffle-tree to the point where the single one (seen in the sketch) is attached, and make the attachment for the load exactly in the middle of the rear evener.

THREE-HORSE EVENER.

A New Insecticide.

A new lice exterminator, recommended by the Arkansas Experiment Station, is made as follows, being a kerosene extract of pyrethrum: 1½ gallons kerosene soaked through 2½ pounds pyrethrum, resulting in a yellowish, oily extract, which will not mix with water, but which will form an emulsion with soap, similar to kerosene emulsion. One pond of soap dissolved in one gallon of boiling water added to one gallon of the extract, well mixed or churned with a force pump, made a perfect emulsion, which, when diluted—one part of emulsion to 450 parts water—readily killed cotton worms. It seems to combine the properties of kerosene and pyrethrum, and to be more effective than either, easier to handle and cheaper.—Farm and Home.

Level Culture for Potatoes.

Almost all practical growers now agree that the level culture of potatoes brings the largest crop. This is especially true if the season is dry, as of late years it almost always is. If the ground is cultivated often enough no weeds can appear above the surface. That will make it easy to keep the crop free of weeds without ever needing to cultivate more than an inch below the surface. This is the best way to subdue the perennial weeds, quack grass and Canada thistles, as well as the annual weeds.

Cutting Clover and Grass Closely.

It is not alone because of injury to scythes, mowers and other implements that the haymaker wants as smooth a surface as he can get. It is necessary to have stones and other inequalities removed if he would be able to cut as closely as he should. The new growth, especially of clover, starts quicker and grows more vigorously if cut close. Besides, much of the weight of both clover and grass is lost if either is cut high. So there is loss by high cutting in the first cut as well as in the aftermath.

Repelling Wire Worms.

It is much easier to drive wire worms from corn than to destroy them in the soil. If a little salt is sprinkleld on the hill it will be washed down by rains and make the locality unpleasant for the worm. Soaking the seed corn in copperas has also the same effect, though we doubt whether the copperas is strong enough poison.

Keep Cultivating.

Keep the sulky cultivator at work in the corn and potato fields. Widen out the frame and run but once in a row. After the field is gone over the long way, then cross it. This cultivation will mellow the ground; start the corn to growing, and kill off the weeds just as they are sprouting.

WOMEN SELDOM STEAL.

THE San Francisco Argonaut is puzzled to understand a fact that surely exists, though for no apparent forceful reason. Woman is more honest than man. Without seeking to decry the statement, the Argonaut says: Whether from a lack of opportunity to realize the power of money, a feminine fear of risk, or a higher sense of honor, women are more trustworthy than men in the handling of money. This is a recognized fact in Europe, where in many businesses the woman holds the purse-strings. The position of cashier is one of those most constantly intrusted to female clerks. The situation, however, in which their lack of thieving propensities is most clearly shown is as domestics. The temptations offered them to steal money, jewels, lace, and other articles of stable value are continuel and enticing, as few housewives take any precaution against dishonest servants. The ornaments and valuables most tempting to women not to mention money, are left about with a carelessness that is a convincing commentary on the trustworthiness of the servant. Indeed, detectives say that when a servant girl steals from her employers, it is almost always at the instigation of some man on the outside.

Why women should enjoy this imperviousness to a temptation before which so many men fall, is a question to which there are several answers. Money, for itself, is not so highly valued by women as by men. When they do steal, it is to gain possession of some coveted article, while, with the other sex, it is the money, or the pleasure to be directly gained from it, which prompts the theft. Women, moreover, have few temptations to pastimes which call for money. Outside their love of personal adornment, they are seldom swayed by desires and ambitions the gratification of which requires wealth. The great world of outside pleasure which invites a man does not exist for them, and that absorbing love of dress and jewelry which is supposed to lead so many weak spirits to frivolity and sin is much less strong than is generally believed.

The temptation of business ventures, of daring speculations and hazardous chances, is one to which women are singularly indifferent. Their ambitions are small. When they can gain a living salary, their dreams are generally realized. The hopes of wealth and luxury which haunt the imaginings of an ordinarily ambitious man are far beyond the modest desire for affluence of the most energetic and enterprising woman. If a woman is not rich by inheritance or marriage, she sets aside the dream of riches as one never to be accomplished. To achieve wealth by her own endeavors, honorable or otherwise, is so perilous and formidable an undertaking that she no more contemplates it than she would seek to gain glory by Arctic or African exploration.

Revolution in Hair Dressing.

News from England says that a revolution in the arrangement of hair on the heads of fashionable women has begun. Hints of the change have been current in London boudoirs for weeks, and already a few women, greatly daring, have displayed the new style in public. The innovation, as usual, is a revival and dates back not to 1830, that epoch year of fashion, but to the years immediately preceding Queen Victoria's accession. Its salient features are a boldly upstanding loop or two of the hair brought decidedly forward, on the top of the head, while the arrangement behind tapers to a point an inch or so from the base of the skull. The novelty which renders it noticeable is the introduction of a scarf of soft silk gauze, or lace, twisted in and out of the coils of hair, which are usually gathered slightly more to one side of the head than the other, the balance being created with a puff or bow of the material.

For the Summer Girl.

What Woman Owes to Society.

Woman stands as the sacred guardian of future homes and our nation's prosperity, and to her must we look for true reforms. To her standard must society come. Let her be sure to place it high and keep it pure, and make it apply impartially to all people. Let her keep out those whom she knows fall short of her standard, and never condone in the stronger sex what she condemns in the weaker. Let her think not to elevate society by hiding or condoning the evils which surround her on every side, but only by shutting out those whom she has found it impossible to raise to her standard. Then future generations will arise who will bless her for their heritage, instead of cursing her for their misery.—Dwight L. Moody, in Ladies' Home Journal.

Gymnasium for Outdoor Girls.

An outdoor gymnasium is the easiest of all things to make, if you have the space. It requires only about thirty square feet of ground, and when you have it completed you have provided yourself with something which, physicians state, is the greatest aid to beauty yet found—exercise in the open air. The most difficult thing to find is the vaulting pole, which must be perfectly straight and smooth. A birch pole with the bark peeled off is good, or any other peelable wood without knot or bend. The rings can be made by soaking supple boughs until they are soft, then bending them into a hoop and wiring them firmly with fine picture wire, fastened without the slightest roughness. Many prefer to purchase small rings that are warranted secure for swinging. The horizontal bar can be managed by bending down a tough bough, while the Indian clubs and dumb-bells can be carved from some heavy wood.

AN OPEN AIR GYMNARIUM.

It will be found that practice in an open-air gymnasium is most interesting, for there is the swaying of the trees and the supple bending of the boughs to make the exercise exciting and varied.—Chicago Chronicle.

Bloomers Not Popular.

Bloomers are not nearly so popular as formerly, but a suit seen the other day deserves a word. It was of greenish-gray cloth, and was worn by an extremist. There were full bloomers laid in knife plaits, and gathered with elastic at the knee. As it was a bright, sunny afternoon the lady wore a heavy white pique waist with a high turnover collar and a neat black cravat. There was a jaunty jacket of the same material as the bloomers cut after the Eton pattern, short and square cornered at the waist. The jacket had a flat collar and wide revers edged with black braid. There were tight sleeves slightly puffed at the shoulder and trimmed with braid. The hose were long and black, and she wore low-cut cycling shoes.

A woman in Harlem shot a neighbor in the neck for goose-egging her.

A New York woman separated two belligerent fellows, and lectured the crowd for permitting the set-to.

A Baltimore woman slapped a justice of the peace in the face for inferring that she was no lady.

A Jersey City woman captured a burglar and then pleaded with the judge to let him off, because he was too handsome to go to jail.

A Milwaukee woman threw her husband into a vat of beer because he refused to buy her a new bonnet.

A South Brooklyn woman beat her husband over the head with a frying pan because he was too lazy to sweep the sidewalk.

A New York woman refused to marry a man and was sued for breach of promise.

A Kentucky woman cut all the buttons off her betrothed's apparel because she didn't like the way he spoke to her.

A Chicago woman severely whipped a man whose boy insulted her.

A Boston woman with a club stood off several angry men who were trying to "do" her husband.—New York World.

Hints for the Shopper

Gold lacing is effectively used on boleros.

The fichu in vogue is of fine embroidered muslin.

Floral patterns abound in cotton grenadines and lace lawns.

Many jackets are of white cloth, with gold or black scroll braiding.

A touch of cerise velvet is seen on one-half of the imported costumes.

AFRAID OF NOTHING.

Mexico's Wild Hog, or Peccary, Runs from Nothing Under the Sun.

The most vicious and fearless of the brute creation is the peccary or wild hog of Mexico. This animal seems utterly devoid of the emotion of fear. I have never seen it turn a hair's breadth out of its path for any living thing, says a writer. Man is its special bete noire. It displays an intelligence in fighting the human strangely at variance with its apparently complete lack of any mental attributes, save the very lowest order of instinct. They are rarely found singly, but go in droves of from a hundred to thousands. Their ability to scent men is particularly marked. I have known a drove of them to scent a man a mile off and strike as straight for him as the arrow flies. There is no use to try to frighten them with guns. The cannonading of a full battery would have no more effect on them than the popping of a fire cracker. The only thing to do when they get after you is to run away from them as fast as a horse can carry you. And then there is no certainty that they won't catch you. They are nearly as swift as a horse, and their endurance is as great as their viciousness.

A friend of mine encountered a drove of them in a wild part of Mexico a few years ago, and his escape was miraculous. He very foolishly shot and wounded a number of them. Then he took refuge in a tree. The peccaries kept him in the tree all that day and through the night. They circled around the tree, grunting and squealing their delight at the prospect of a feast. He soon exhausted his ammunition, and brought down a peccary at each fire. But this had no terrors for the beasts. Along toward morning the brutes began to eat the ones he had killed, and when they thus satistied the cravings of their stomachs they formed in line and trotted off. If they had not had some of their own number to devour, they would have guarded that tree until my friend, through sheer exhaustion, dropped from his perch and allowed them to make a meal of him. The wild cats and tigers that infest the Mexican wilds, flee from the peccaries with instinctive fear, and even rattlesnakes keep out of their path.

An Actor's Ruse.

"Had a funny experience down in Georgia once," laughed the actor who has been over the whole foute from barn-stormer to leading man in a crack company.

"We had played a little one-night town where the people expressed their appreciation by a vegetable bombardment of all on the stage. I was hurrying to the little dingy hotel, mad as a hornet, when I heard one of the natives making some very caustic remarks about my efforts to personate Claude Melnotte. I was foolish enough to pitch into him, and five minutes later I was the sole occupant of the calaboose. After relieving myself by swearing a few chapters, and wondering how far I would have to walk to catch up with the company, I suddenly struck upon a possible scheme of escape.

"In my wrath I had not waited at the hall to get rid of my make-up. Now I snatched off my blonde wig, washed the cosmetics from my dark face, stuffed my gay wrappings under a bunk, made my seedy suit look a little more disreputable by a few rents, and then sent up a yell for help. This brought the sleepy constable, who looked as though he wanted to run when he caught sight of me. I assumed an Irish brogue and talked so fast that he had no chance to think or talk back. I told him how 'some divil of a pirate capered out of the place just as Oi war passin' peaceable as a lam', trun me in afoor Oi could aven spake, an' barred the dour on me.'

"He hurried me out, gave me $2 if I'd say nothing, left the door wide open and went home. I recaptured my bundle and left with the rest of the company on the early train."—Free Press.

Royal Correspondence.

A letter sent to a native prince in India is a very elaborate affair. The paper is specially made for the purpose, and is sprinkled with gold leaf. Only the last few lines of the somewhat lengthy document contain the purport of the letter, while the remainder is made up of the usual round-about and complimentary phrases. It is folded in a peculiar way, with the flaps outward, and placed in a muslin bag, and this latter into one of crimson and gold tint, with a slip-knot of gold thread, attached to which is a ponderous seal. The address, written on a slip of parchment, is attached to the outside bag. These details are very important for polite letter writing in India, and if any of them were omitted it would be an insult to the person addressed.

Desired Information.

While preaching a sermon on the tender wisdom of the Omnipotent, a preacher illustrated his point by saying that He knows which of us grows best in the sunlight, and which must have shade. "You know you plant roses in the sunshine," he said, "and heliotrope and geraniums; but if you want your fuchsias to grow, you must keep them in a shady nook." After the sermon a woman came up to him, her face glowing with pleasure. "Oh, Doctor, I am so grateful for that sermon," she said, clasping his hand and shaking it warmly. His heart glowed for a moment—only for a moment, though. "Yes,' she went on fervently, "I never knew before what was the matter with my fuchsias."

Battery in His Mouth.

A gentleman recently suffered from a pain in his tongue, which he could not account for, and was afraid of cancer. After the doctor had said there was nothing the matter with his mouth an electrical friend discovered that two different metals had been used for fixing the teeth. These dissimilar metals had the effect of producing an electrical current in the gentleman's mouth.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR RIOTS.

Chicago Judge Renders a Decision of Great Importance.

A decision of far-reaching importance has been handed down by Judge Adams in the damage cases growing out of the rioting during the railway troubles of 1894. One of the companies whose property was destroyed during those riots has made a test case by suing the city of Chicago under the State law of 1887, which makes municipalities liable for damage done by mobs within their boundaries. Judge Adams has upheld the law and allowed the damage claims. If the Supreme Court sustains the decision it is understood that a large number of concerns which suffered from the riots of 1894 are in readiness to bring forward claims aggregating more than $1,000,000.

No doubt the responsibility of cities for deeds of violence and destruction must be gauged in each case more or less by their power or their helplessness to prevent the outrages. But considering that in any event nearly every law of this sort depends for its success upon the wisdom with which it is applied, the Supreme Court is not likely to find any reason for declaring the riot law invalid. A municipal government tacitly assumes to be the protector of all who come within its juriedictton. Acting on behalf of the whole community, it must become responsible for the peace of all, and, of necessity, for the peace and safety of individuals. Wherein it fails in this duty, its liability for damages justly would be measured by its ability—or lack of ability—to defend the community. There are certain upheavals, which, like cyclones and earthquakes, are not to be foreseen or prevented.

At the same time, as the municipal government is the representative and authorized agent of the people, it is the people themselves who must bear the burden of responsibility, and, failing to discharge the obligation, must pay for their failure. Where a large part of the people or all of them indulge in damaging riots the penalty is still more just. Where the damage was done by a very few the penalty comes from the laxness or inefficiency of the Government.

There is another phase of this question, however, and one which should be brought home to all classes of people who may be tempted to give way to mob passion and violate the laws. Under this law, which is founded in equity, the rioters who seek vengeance by demolishing property are injuring only themselves and others who may be in actual sympathy with them. To destroy the property of an oppressive corporation may hurt that corporation temporarily. In the long run, it is the whole community at large which pays—giving up increased taxes that the corporations may be reimbursed for their losses, and losing by the withdrawal of capital and enterprise to safer surroundings. The folly of rioting as a means of carrying a battle against oppression must bring its own penalty to the rioters. Wherever troubles like those of 1894 arise again, those who are most deeply concerned should take the truth to heart and look for other and more effective measures with which to carry their point.—Chicago Record.

Happy Answers.

Wordy duels frequently occur between counsel and witness, as is well known, and the lawyer does not always come out unscathed.

"Look at me, sir, and attend to what I shall ask you," thundered a learned counsel whose unfortunate "homeliness" of feature had gained him the sobriquet of the Veiled Prophet.

"This is an English court," rejoined the witness, quietly, "and you have no right to impose torture before putting the question."

"I can teach you law, sir, but I cannot teach you manners," said an exasperated counsel to a small, meek witness.

The latter quietly replied, "That is so, sir," and people laughed consumedly.

The happy answers owing their point to Biblical allusions are numerous, and in many cases too audacious for print. "He is a regular Saint Paul" was the final eulogy made by an enthusiastic friend of a certain needy clergyman whose chronic impecuniosity had brought him into painfully frequent familiarity with the various processes of the law for the recovery of debts. "Yes," said the bishop, whose assistance was being solicited, "quite so. I see—'in prisons oft!'"

The pardonable but injudicious enthusiasm of some clergymen over their musical services has given rise to many smart sayings. None, perhaps, is better than the familiar one of the exasperated visitor who, after being made to listen in torment to Gregorian chants cruelly murdered, was told that according to tradition those chants owed their origin to King David himself. The visitor, rendered reckless by his misery, retorted that he had often wondered why Saul threw that javelin at the royal psalmist, but he quite understood it now. A careworn divine is reported to have said in reply to the ecstatic declaration of an intending Benedict that "nothing in the world beats a good wife." "Oh, yes, a bad husband often does, and—vice versa!"

Does a Great Deal.

"My good man, do you ever do anything to bring light and purity into the homes of your fellow men?"

"Yuss, lots."

"You distribute tracts?"

"No; I cleans windows and beats carpets.—Illustrated Bits.

Arrangements for the State Fair are being pushed with vigor. The Directors are giving the pavilion a new cast and greater prominence is to be given to produce than to merchandise. Eight thousand square feet are to be set aside for horticultural and agricultural exhibits, and the most artistic arrangement is to be made of them, including a vista of grass plats, rustic vases holding blooming flowers, and other effects pleasing to the eye. At the extreme west end of this space a rockery and fountain are to be constructed, which will be ornamented with growing ferns and water plants. At each side of the fountain there will be select exhibits of grass plats, blooming plants, fruits and flowers. A nursery company of Niles has engaged considerable space for a rare exhibit of palms, potted plants, etc., and it is expected that other nurserymen will make their usual carefully selected display. All other features of the fair will be worked up with the same zeal as the horticultural, and a great exhibition may be looked for.

A thorough revision of the rules governing the adjudication of pension claims under the second section of the act of June 27, 1890, has been made by Assistant Secretary of the Interior Webster Davis, and sweeping modifications in the present practice are the result. The new code, it is said, will furnish a safe, speedy and uniform system of adjustment of this large class of cases. Assistant Secretary Davis holds that the very nature of the pension cases forbids the application of strictness and technicality of court proceedings and that it was not the intention of Congress to hedge the administration of these laws with the difficulties and pitfalls of any system of special pleading whose technicalities and refinements may tend to a practical defeat of the government's benevolent purposes. The modifications are made in six rules, and former rules and decisions in conflict with them are set aside.

The Italian Government recently desired seven gunboats completed within nine months, and a single firm in Great Britain took the contract and completed the whole job in three months. This fact has attracted considerable attention because it shows how vast is the shipbuilding capacity of Great Britain and how rapidly she can increase her navy whenever she has need to do so. Anent the armor plate squabble in this country it is stated that it would require two years for the United States to build a plant for its manufacture.

The scheme of covering the Sahara with forest is pronounced by M. P. Privat Deschenel utterly impracticable, the arid plateaus being hopeless desert. On a limited scale, however, the valleys—most of which are favored with a small amount of water—may be successfully planted with tamarish, acacia, eucalyptus and poplar, the last-named tree having unexpectedly proved most suitable. In the forest shelter vegetable and fruit trees may be grown.

It is said that in view of the attitude of Japan, Secretary Sherman is of the opinion that United States proteciton is the only way to prevent hostile action during the intervening months before Congress reconvenes. Minister Sewell has had frequent consultations with President Dole of the Hawaiian government and it is believed that, in certain contingencies, they have agreed upon a program to declare a protectorate and raise the American flag.

Expert statisticians differ in their estimates as to the aggregate of the wheat crop. It is probably a middle figure to accept 550,000,000 bushels as the result of the wheat harvest. Of this the country will have 160,000,000 surplus. The shortage abroad is 100,000,000 on the European continent, and in addition there is the demand from Brazil. This ought to assure wheatgrowers a stiff price for the entire surplus of the American crop.

Many Slavs and Hungarians of the lower order, those who have been so plentiful, ignorant and intolerant in coal mines, are said to be returning to Europe—after undermining the American workmen and disturbing all relations of capital and labor. At the East the general expression is, "we can spare them." This is but a reflection of a growing sentiment in favor of more rigid exclusion.

The days of limit given for Andree, the Arctic baloonist, to be heard from if he reached a point of safety have passed. The probabilities are that the adventurous scientist will not again be heard of. But suppose he had safely crossed over that mysterous point, the North Pole, what then? Has any one been able to indicate the practical value of such an achievement?

A strong effort will be make in the East this winter to influence Congress to establish postal savings banks, and it is probable the promoters of the project will at least succeed in getting a bill to that effect introduced and bringing about a debate upon it which will go far toward convincing the public of the importance of the subject.

The Hebrew bible reads "when silver and gold increases, then everything thou possessest will be multiplied." This shows that the principle of bimetalism was of early origin and not a fad of the nineteenth century.

NEWS FROM THE SOUTHERN MINES

The San Francisco Call of the 1st inst. contained the following, accompanied with a fair portrait illustration of Mr. Langdon:

W. J. Langdon arrived in the city yesterday from the Panamint Mountains, and reports a disastrous cloudburst which occurred last Wednesday on the Death Valley side of the mountains. It struck the ranch of the notorious Indian, Panamint Tom, about 9 o'clock in the morning, and swept everything before it. Tom's orchard of 150 trees was torn up, his garden entirely destroyed, the camp tepees swept away and the ranch wrecked generally. At the time of the occurrence there were eleven Indians on the ranch, but aside from a good drenching they sustained no injuries. The stock was on high ground and escaped the force of the water. The center of the burst was on Tom's ranch, and no damage was done to any of the surrounding property.

Mr. Langdon is the man who discovered the gold at Randsburg in February of 1894, and is now living in Pleasant Valley, up in the Panamint mountains, about eighty-five miles from Randsburg. He says there have been some very rich mines discovered there within the last four months and that considerable San Francisco capital is being invested there. In Tuba Canyon a large number of men are employed by Thomas B. Pheby and other capitalists in opening up mines. Rich strikes have been made in Revenue Canyon and a great many miners are chloriding in Shepherd's, Cottonwood and Emigrant Canyons.

These were all struck this summer and show up well. H. S. Myers of Tulare has opened up several mines, and has spent considerable money in equipping them. They are full of good ore and promise well, though no ore has been milled as yet. Montgomery Bros. & Co., owners of the World Beater, Elephant and Mammoth, are allowing men to chloride on their properties near Pleasant City, and rich ore is taken out.

Julius Goldsmith, the partner of Langdon, has a splendid mine in Pleasant Canyon. The ore assays $244 to the ton. Goldsmith and Langdon are the men who were reported killed by Panamint Tom some time since, and it is rather a curious fact that this same Tom pointed out the mine to Goldsmith.

New placer diggings have recently been discovered on the Death Valley side of the mountains, and they pan out $30 to $40 a day.

Langdon has been prospecting on the desert for the past four years, and has a fund of interesting information about the country in which he lives.

The gold in the Panamint mountains was discovered by a gang of stage robbers who were hiding from the officers after an operation near Austin, Nevada. [They knew nothing about gold; they found silver; they were too "tough" to hide from officers, but the discoverers were not all stage robbers.—ED. INDEPENDENT.] They sent out news of the discovery, compromised with the express company and settled down to mining. Happy Canyon was at one time the rendezvous of the celebrated Vasques.

The old town of Panamint, which formerly had 1000 inhabitants, can now only boast of two. Large stores, saloons and billiard-halls with their furniture are going to decay. There is a large hardware and implement store fully stocked still running, where the miners can get goods at almost their own price. Several silver mills well built and furnished with machinery are idle.

The new Panamint is about twelve miles from there and is a flourishing little city. The country is well watered and timbered and fine fruit is raised in the mountains. Quail are found in abundance and mountain sheep are seen occasionally.

There are a number of Shoshone Indians, who as a general rule are good workers, thrifty, industrious and good livers. Panamint George has a fine ranch, supplies the miners with fruit and melons and raises large crops of alfalfa. The Indians all know of valuable mines, and when they find one will cover it up. If a white man will use a little diplomacy and get on the good side of them he can learn where the mines are.

"At Randsburg they are taking out more gold than ever, but there is not so much talk about it, as the boom is over and they are getting down to a solid business basis. New discoveries of large ledges are being made all the time. In the Scookum and Petiloma mines, four miles west of Randsburg, nine-foot ledges have been found. The ore works about about $35 a ton.

"The St. Elmo has put in a large gasoline hoist, and fair ore is taken out.

"Placer strikes have recently been made north of the town. They extend in a radius of two to four miles, and are supposed to be the old Gales wash. From $7 to $10 is the average amount panned out in a day."

Tesla's utterances about wireless telegraphy recall the fact that an Italian some time ago claimed its invention and application in numerous experiments. His name is Guglielmo (William) Marconi. He even succeeded in transmitting signals through a hill. These first experiments remained the secret of the family circle till he went to London last year with his mother, who is an English woman. There he soon attracted the attention of the director of the telegraphic service in England, who gave a lecture, which Marconi illustrated with his experiments. Private and public experiments soon followed. Some were given in the ministry of war and others in the general postoffice, in the presence of high authorities. The experiments were made with the primitive apparatus made in Italy, and yet, even then, telegrams were sent to very great distances in all directions and also through a little hill. Since then Marconi has been enabled to improve his original apparatus and hopes soon to send telegrams through hills and rivers by his new method of telegraphing.

A late utterance of Secretary of State John Sherman is quoted as follows: "England is a great country, but it is not always safe to assume that she is ready to follow up every quarrel with blows. She quarrels oftener than she fights. It would be exceedingly difficult for her to fight us all alone about seal catching. Russia and Japan are in a similar position, and any quarrel between the United States and England on this score would probably involve these other countries." To which the London Globe mildly chirps: "Secretary Sherman had better rid himself of the idea that Uncle Sam is going to boss this country, either in the gold fields or in the fisheries. When we strike we strike hard, and the idea of our being afraid of a third rate naval power like the United States could only have occurred to a lunatic or to Mr. Sherman. Judging from his latest performances we may charitably assume that the rumors that Mr. Sherman is suffering from mental disturbances are correct." Now, if Uncle Sam has to take his warship out of that big English dry dock—the only place he can get in which to patch the thing up—this country will be put to several dollars' expense.

Senor Canovas del Castillo, Prime Minister of Spain, has been killed by an anarchist assassin. The Premier was one of the ablest and most liberal of the Spanish rulers. More wholesale executions will follow. The anarchist recently executed by being shot in the back were the last of a batch of fiends who were guilty of throwing a bomb on June 7, 1896, into a religious procession about to enter a church, thereby killing twelve people and wounding fifty others.

France is said to have discovered a paint which, when applied to vessels, renders them invisible under the rays of the searchlight. Something of the kind is used in this country, when official boodlers are whitewashed.

The Homiletic Review holds that inordinate novel reading weakens the intellect, the power is lost to grapple with realities and great truths, and what is true feeling is deadened, besides destroying the taste for other and more solid reading.

One of the important (?) provisions of modern revenue law is that manufacturers shall not offer or distribute prizes or premiums, thus prohibiting tobacco lotteries, etc. It says nothing about Senators gambling in sugar stocks.

Warm—fine "corn weather."

Board of Education adjourned.

Inyo has generally escaped "Klondicitis" and "Alaskamania."

Irv. H. Mulholland and daughter Ruth returned from the Bay last Monday.

Timothy "Dick" Richards and Geo. H. Palmer were up from Lone Pine last Saturday, looking remarkably well for sick men.

Antonio Savedra, the Mexican who shot Hargis at Lone Pine, was last Saturday discharged from custody by Judge Davidson.

Our San Francisco prints must be running the outside date lines of this paper according to last year's callendar. Read "13" for "14."

The Keynot mining litigation is a long-winded affair. The case began July 22d and, it is thought, will not be submitted before the last of next week.

Bob and Jim Harry have about a carload of ore ready for shipment from their mine near Darwin. Bob has so far recovered from his late illness as to be able to sack ore, anyway.

The Inyo range will resound with the racket of wood-choppers and teams. The railroad contracts for 5,000 cords: Tom Rickey for 15,000 posts and L. F. J. Wrinkle for 3,000.

Mrs. Chas. Turner arrived at Bishop last Monday from San Francisco and will spend a month visiting with her mother, Mrs. Yandell, and her sister, Mrs. P. W. Forbes, at Independence.

Johnny Underhill, accompanied by his wife and sister-in-law, passed through Independence last Tuesday on their way home to Mojave, after a month delightfully spent at Mammoth.

The bond to D. C. Lane of the Anthony mining property at Pleasant Canyon has been extended. This property is altogether too valuable and well developed to be permitted to lie idle so long.

A "farewell" party was given at the Baxter residence on Saturday evening last. Mrs. John Baxter and Miss Jennie go up the coast to Washington for an extended visit, while Clifford returns to school.

After nine years of attention to the business a resident of town has succeeded in reproducing one genuine Indiana black walnut, "from the seed." He says that the industry is not a sudden means of amassing great wealth.

A party composed of Misses Lizzie Thompson, Effie Roeper, Margie Bell and Annie Schabbell, escorted by Neel Bell and Ivan Bunney set out for the mountains last Tuesday. They go via Kearsarge trail to General Grant Park in the Big Trees.

M. C. Brockman, one of Inyo's rugged old pioneers, is in town after a long trip of observation and business through the Randsburg and lower country. In a few days he will go to prospecting for gold on a creek right here at home—and one known to contain the stuff.

Frank Fitzgerald has obtained an option or bond on the Curran, Henebry & Warnock gold mines at Jail Canyon, and we hope that he will get them. One—the Gem mine—is the best developed ledge of good ore in that section, magnificently situated as to access and a water power.

Some improvements are going on about town, adding to the general newness of things. If somebody would put a new front on the old stable north of Chenot's store, or if some gentle mountain zephyr would come down and demolish the structure, the last unsightly blemish would be gone from the otherwise fair burg.

Johannesburg contemplates, with great satisfaction, the fact that the Randsburg railway is about to begin building, and material for its construction is daily arriving at Kramer. That this place is to be the terminal of the road, and here will be its round house, shops and offices, means much for the added prosperity of the town.—Randsburg Miner.

At the Defiance mine, Darwin, since the placing of a new boiler for the hoisting engine, sinking has been prosecuted at the lowest point in the mine, and from certain indications Superintendent McDonald propores to drop on to a bonanza within the next week or ten days. The success of the company operating the Sorba mine in striking ore at the greatest depth yet attained in the New Coso District, has stimulated deeper work on the old Defiance.

Social Function at Mammoth.

On the evening of August 2d a "hop" was given to the people of the town and the many campers by the Chicago & London Gold Mining Co. A large platform was erected near the company's mill; the scene was brilliantly lighted by bonfires and mine headlights. The music was furnished by Prof. Hampton's Orchestra.

Among those present were the following: Mr. and Mrs. Bedford, Mr. and Mrs. Underhill, Mr. and Mrs. Summerville, Mojave; Mr. and Black, Mr. and Mrs. McFarland, Mr. and Mrs. Kingsley, Mr. and Mrs. Crosscup, Mr. and Mrs. Inman, Mr. and Mrs. McLeod, Bishop; Capt. Beck, Judge Tinnen, Thos. B. Hughes, Fresno; White Smith, Selma. Col. L. S. Judd, Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. Bodle, Big Pine; Misses Mary Mulholland, Independence: Nellie Coyle, Sonora; Tessie Morrissey, Eva Underhill, Mojave; Henrietta Shirley, Lillian Shirley, Nancy Bodle, Minnie Koch, Ola McCosh, Hazel Judd, Maud Etta Crosscup, Bishop; Maggie Beck, Fresno: Messrs. Clay Hampton, Dugald McKinnon, Chas Drake, Geo. Neal, John Clarke, Jacob Schober, Rudolph Schober, S. William Smith, Arthur Shirley, Bishop; M. Paige Miner, San Francisco; Mr. Chittenden, Washington, D. C.: Earle Canedy, Chicago; John Collins, Poleta; N. E. Thompson, Mammoth; J. S. White, San Francisco; J. Rhinehart, Mojave; Phil. Summerville, Jerusalem, Holy Land: L. Olds, Round Valley; James Burns, Rickey's Ranch; Steve May, Eugene Juneau, Long Valley; Henry Chastin, Mojave; J. Hudgins, Virginia City; Henry Noyes; Frank O. Bacon, Sacramento: Chas. Albright, Pine City; Chas New York, China.

Ballarat School.

BALLARAT, August 7, 1897.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT—At a meeting of the citizens of Ballarat, Inyo County, for the purpose of making arrangements for a school for the ensuing school term, it was Resolved—To elect three citizens to serve in the capacity of School Directors in Ballarat and vicinity until such time as the county grants a district and appoints Directors for same in said vicinity. And further

Resolved—That said Directors be authorized to obtain a house and employ a teacher to teach a school in Ballarat, commencing on the first Monday in September, 1897, and continuing for a term of six months next following. Said teacher to be hired with the understanding that he or she wait until such time as the newly formed district shall draw public school money to pay his or her salary.

Messrs. Hickey, Martin and Calloway were duly elected to serve as Directors.

On motion, the Secretary of meeting was directed to send a copy of these proceedings to the INYO INDEPENDENT and the Randsburg Miner, with request to publish same.

A Miner Badly Hurt.

Henry Werner met with a giant powder accident last week at Shepherd's Canyon, in some manner totally unexplained as yet. Himself and partner, a man by the name of Davis, were working in an open cut, on what is said to be a fine discovery. Werner's skull was fractured on the left side of the head and he received other less serious injuries. Davis managed to obtain a buckboard at the Panamint Junction and brought the unconscious man to Darwin, from whence Dr. Woodin was summoned. The Doctor returned on Wednesday from his second trip there, and reports that under treatment the injured man has partially regained consciousness and so far as he can be understood accuses Davis of intentionally causing the explosion, while Davis has claimed that he was forty feet away at the time. Werner was formerly at Georges Creek with J. W. Lacy, who is at Darwin and will start back with him next Sunday if the Doctor then finds him in condition to withstand removal. So far as learned Davis is unknown hereabouts, but since the occurrence has been at Keeler, where he sacrificed his prospecting outfit.

It appears that Banker Anderson, when he unnecessarily gave his horse last water he had, the other day on an Arizona desert, took some whisky himself, no doubt with the idea of keeping up his strength. He died and his weak wife survived; the whisky killed him. It is something that everybody ought to know—that alcohol gives no strength for a sustained effort and is the worst thing that anybody can take with the idea of sustaining fatigue in either hot weather or cold. It gives a temporary stimulous and them comes a reaction that is more disabling than the natural fatigue would have been. For quenching thirst and at the same time furnishing sustenance, there is nothing like oatmeal and water. But, water or no water, alcohol never.

Oscar, a nine-year old son of Fred Burkhardt, the well known Lone Pine jeweler, received a terrific kick from "a gentle old horse" one day last week. He was passing the animal through a gate and to accellerate the brute's motion struck him with a hat. The horse let fly with his heel, striking the boy square in the forehead, inflicting a very serious if not dangerous injury. Dr. Woodin states that od Wednesday the boy was getting much better.

The Secretary of the Interior has announced officially that the order opening the forestry reservations for the admittance of stock to graze does not apply to the Yosemite National Park. Sheep and their herders and dogs and packs have been scattered out of there by the military guard.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy always affords prompt relief. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

A Remarkable Cure of Chronic Diarrhœa.

In 1862, when I served my country as a private in Company A, 167th Pennsylvania Volunteers, I contracted chronic diarrhœa. It has given me a greet deal of trouble ever since. I have tried a dozen different medicines and several prominent doctors without any permanent relief. Not long ago a friend sent me a sample bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and after that I bought a bottle and took a 50-cent bottle: and now I can say that I am entirely cured. I cannot be thankful enough to you for this great Remedy, and recommend it to all suffering veterans. If in doubt write me. Yours gratefully, HENRY STEINBERGER, Allentown, Pa. Sold by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Immediately upon the reopening of the United States Mint at San Francisco several Klondyke miners appeared with dust and nuggets to be minted into twenty dollar pieces. The free and unlimited coinage of gold gives these men opportunities denied to the silver miner, who has to sell his metal as bullion at the price which the gold gamblers have been able to place upon it because of the demonetization of silver. That price is such that it does not pay to operate many of the best silver mines in the country, and consequently thousands upon thousands of men have been thrown out of employment.

LEGAL ADVERTISEMENTS.

Notice of Commissioner's Sale on Foreclosure of Mortgage.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN ORDER of Sale and Decree or Foreclosure issued out of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, on the 19th day of July, 1897, wherein E. H. Edwards, as plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree against Abraham Diaz et al., defendants, on the 14th day of July, 1897, which said decree was on the 19th day of July, 1897, recorded in Judgment Book No. 2 of said court, at page 52, under and by which I am appointed Commissioner and commanded to sell all those certain pieces or parcels of land situated, lying and being in the County of Inyo, State of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

Commencing at the section corner common to Sections 3, 4, 9 and 10, Township 16 South, Range 36 east, M. D. M.; running thence West 22.76 chains; thence North 3 degrees West 14.10 chains; thence South 75 degrees West 17.75 chains; thence South 9.50 chains; thence East 40 chains to the place of beginning, save and except that certain building situate thereon and known as the "Wine Cellar House."

Also the North half of the Northeast quarter of Section No. 9; the North half of the Southeast quarter, and the Northeast quarter of the Southwest quarter; the North half of the Northwest quarter, Southeast quarter of the Northwest quarter, the Southwest quarter of the Northeast quarter of Section No. 16, all in Township 16 South, Range 36 East, M. D. M.

Also the following described lots of land in the town of Lone Pine, in said Inyo county, to-wit: Lots Nos. 5 and 8 in block No. 20; Lot No. 7 in block No. 8; East half of lots Nos. 5 and 8 in block No. 5, as the same are known and designated on the official plat of said town of Lone Pine, now on file in the office of the County Recorder of said Inyo county.

Also those certain mines or mining claims situate, lying and being in the Cerro Gordo mining district, county of Inyo, State of California, commonly known and called the Alvah quartz mine and the San Lucas mine; said mines being 1500 feet in length and 600 feet in width.

Together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging, or in any wise appertaining.

Notice is hereby given that on Wednesday, the 18th day of August, 1897, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, in front of the Court House in the town of Independence, County of Inyo, California, I will, in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above described property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy plaintiff's judgment, with interest thereon and costs, to the highest and best bidder for cash in gold coin of the United States.

Dated, Independence, Cal., July 20th, 1897.

WEARS LIKE GRANITE.

A New Kind of Cement Compound That Will Be Valuable to the Building Trade.

Report is made in the chemical journals of a new kind of cement compound which has been introduced in Europe with very satisfactory results. This substance, to which the name of "petrifite" is given, is intended to be used for the conversion of organic or inorganic matter—whether it be waste, wet or dry, pure or mixed—into a hard, durable mass impervious to water, of great strength and free from all atmospheric influences.

The composition employed is not stated, but it is in the form of a white powder, and the statement is made that, mixed with sand, it produces a sandstone of durable quality; with sawdust a body similar to hard wood, but indestructible, while with slate waste the result is an agreeable marble.

According to The Chemical Trade Journal, the most reliable chemical authorities who have examined and experimented with this product have expressed very favorable opinions as to its value, and Professor Banschinger of the Munich laboratory, who is one of the leading experts in all such matters, states that the wearing quality of this new substance, with sawdust, is equal to the best granite and basalt.—Exchange.

IT BEATS THE RECORD.

The Speed of a Man's Heart Pulsations Puzzles the Doctors.

William Wiggins, a cook, 35 years old, who is now at the City hospital, St. Louis, has a heart that is a record breaker. The average heart, as is known, beats at the rate of about 70 pulsations per minute, while that of Wiggins amuses itself by sprinting along at the speed of 212 beats each 60 seconds.

And yet he does not die, and therein lies the peculiarity of his case. Other hearts have been known to take sprinting spells, but when they have reached a speed of about 150 pulsations to the minute they have usually gotten tired and have stopped indefinitely. Not so with Wiggins. After a speedy spell his heart usually stops completely for a short period. It has always started again.

Wiggins' heart has been affected with this strange trouble for about two years, without apparent cause. During an attack he suffers intensely, but at other times is free from pain. He is improving under treatment.—St. Louis Republic.

A Ten Years' Walk For a Wager.

George Herold, the original boy tramp, left St. Louis nine years and eight months ago on a wager of $5,000 that he could walk 65,000 miles in ten years and earn $5,000 on his travels. He has two months left to complete his journey and has earned $4,682. He has credentials from nearly all the cities he has visited and carries vouchers for all the money he has earned. During his travels he has visited 44 states and one territory. On the completion of his journey he will engage in business in St. Louis with the money he has saved.—St. Louis Republic.

Dove Lived Twenty-nine Years.

A ring or turtle dove died here yesterday at the age of 29 years. It was the property of Miss Anna Angelspurger and was presented to her while she was attending the ladies' seminary at North Bloomfield, Pa., 25 years ago.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Summer Martyr.

There's a novel that is waiting
On a shelf not far away
To be read to a conclusion
When I have the time, some day.
The heroine was charming
And the villain was a churl—
How I long to know the fortunes
That befel that lovely girl.

I'm convinced 'twould not be proper
When such problems grave engage
The thinkers of the present
Even to glance at fiction's page,
And I read debates and essays—
Spurn all sentimental larks—
Though I long for more lovemaking
And a few quotation marks.

So I truly hope a tariff
May be soon decided on;
That with reference to Cuba
Something proper may be done.
Then, with conscience unprotesting,
I again may turn and look
On the cherished fascinations
Of my yellow covered book.

MRS. ELLA M'GARVY.

Writing to Mrs. Pinkham,

Says:—I have been using your Vegetable Compound and find that it does all that it is recommended to do. I have been a sufferer for the last four years with womb trouble, weak back and excretions. I was hardly able to do my household duties, and while about my work was so nervous that I was miserable. I had also given up in despair, when I was persuaded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today, I am feeling like a new woman.—MRS. ELLA MCGARVY, Neebe Road Station, Cincinnati, O.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills work in unison with the Compound, and are a sure cure for constipation and sick-headache. Mrs. Pinkham's Sanative Wash is frequently found of great value for local application. Correspondence is freely solicited by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., and the strictest confidence assured. All druggists sell the Pinkham's remedies. The Vegetable Compound in three forms—Liquid, Pills, and Lozenges.

Bolting It.

Mother—Johnny, how often have I told you that you must not bolt your food?

Johnny—Guess it isn't any worse to bolt my food than it is for you to turn the key on it when it's in the cupboard.—Boston Transcript.

Infectious.

Little Boreham (relating his Alpine adventures)—There I stood, the abyss yawning at my feet——

Cropper (yawning portentiously)—'Scuse me, B., but the thing's infectious.—Household Words.

One of the Sure Signs.

"What made you think Lillian was literary?"

"Why, she wears her hair so mussy."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

A New Auto-Motor.

Talk about your roller skates.—New York Journal.

A Pretty Compliment.

Miss Baquebay—I had such a pretty compliment from my optician to-day.

Miss Fenway—What was it, dear?

Miss Baquebay—He told me that I had the best nose for eyeglasses that ever came under his professional treatment.—Boston Transcript.

Important Discovery.

Bliffers (reading)—Science now recognizes a condition called "intoxication by radiation." Many cases of drunkenness are cited in which the victim had touched nothing alcoholic but had simply been in the company of drinkers.

Whiffers—Cut that out. I want to show it to my wife.—Pearson's Weekly.

A Disagreeable Consequence.

"You say you hate to visit your rich relatives. Why? Don't they treat you well?"

"Oh, yes, they always do everything they can to make it pleasant for us, but my wife never gets through complaining until about two weeks after each visit because we are not as well off as they."—Cleveland Leader.

Her Occupation.

"Well, Mollie," said the little girl's father, "what have you been doing all day?"

"Doing nothing," said Mollie, pouting. "I've been don'ting most of the time."—Harper's Bazar.

An Outcropping.

"How do you know that stranger is from Brooklyn?"

"He registered at the hotel as from Greater New York."—Philadelphia North American.

More Generous.

"You said that when we were married you would refuse me nothing."

"I'll be still more generous. I'll not even refuse you nothing. I'll give it to you."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Bound to Weep.

Mrs. Mulligan—An' phat be yez cryin' for, Mrs. Muldoon?

Mrs. Muldoon—The bank's bu'sted—got a cint fur enny wun!

Mrs. Mulligan—An' did yez have money saved in it, Mrs. Muldoon?

Mrs. Muldoon—I did not, but this is the wan I'd go in ef I did.—New York Journal.

The Real Trouble.

"They say he is short in his accounts, don't they?"

"That is what they say, but the fact is, he is short in his cash."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

A Hint to the King.

Mr. Bellefield—It seems to be true that "Uneasy lies the head which wears a crown."

Mr. Bloomfield—No wonder. I should think a king would put on a more comfortable nightcap.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

The Cheerful Idiot.

"So you say," began the moderately new boarder, "that he speculated on a large scale exclusively. May I inquire what was the use of this large scale."

"Glad to answer you," replied the Cheerful Idiot. "He had to have it for weighing the consequences."—Indianapolis Journal.

"A Bored Walk."

—Chicago Inter Ocean.

An Inference, Probably.

"What would you call the sound produced when the two bodies come together?" asked the teacher, who was trying to explain what a noise is to her pupils.

"Oh, a kiss, ma'am," replied the little girl who evidently had older sisters.—Yonkers Statesman.

Of Course Not.

"Why didn't you move on when the policeman ordered you to?" asked the New York judge of the prisoner.

"I no untersthand him, shudge," replied the prisoner.

"You seem to understand English all right now."

"Yes, shudge, bud de p'liceman no speaka de English."—Yonkers Statesman.

The Supreme Power.

"Do you mean to say," thundered the court, "that you hold any human authority higher than the laws of the land?"

"No," stammered the timid witness, "except when I'm at home. My wife makes the laws there."—Detroit Free Press.

Will It Come to This?

Youthful Male Applicant—I know I've been a pretty tough lot, sir, but——

St. Peter—Oh, never mind that; walk right in. Young men are so terribly scarce nowadays that we can't afford to be particular.—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Why They Do It.

She—A woman marries a man to keep him indoors.

He—And a man marries a woman to keep her in hats.—Yonkers Statesman.

Before His Time.

Sunday-school Teacher—Tommy, who made all these beautiful fields and mountains?

Tommy—I don't know. We just moved here.

The Cheerful Idiot.

"One time," said the traveled boarder, "I got snowed in on the Rocky Mountains, and the only thing seven of us had for two days to sustain life was half a barrel of pickled pigs' feet."

"You were, indeed," said the cheerful idiot, "reduced to extremities."—Indianapolis Journal.

Her Post-Graduate Course.

Daughter—Yes, I've graduated, but now I must inform myself in psychology, philology, bibli——

Practical mother—Stop right where you are. I have arranged for you a thorough course in roastology, boilology, stitchology, darnology, patchology and general domestic hustology. Now get on your working clothes.—Detroit Free Press.

Couldn't Find Landseer.

Madam—Well, Mary, what did you think of the pictures at the academy?

Mary—Oh, mum, there was a picture called "Two Dogs," after Landseer, but I looked at it for nearly half an hour and I couldn't see anything of Landseer.—Tit-Bits.

A Poser.

"Father, are generals brave men?" asked Johnny of his father.

"Yes, my son, as a rule," was the answer.

"Then why does artists always make pictures of 'em standing on a hill three miles away looking at a battle through an opera glass?"—Tid-Bits.

Seals Love Music.

The well-known love of seals for musical sounds too often leads to their distruction. When the Eskimo hunter sees none of his prey about he begins whistling, and sooner or later is sure to attract an appreciative seal within reach of his harpoon. Lying at full length at the edge of the ice he continues whistling low, plaintive calling notes, and presently a few of the animals will draw near to the spot, lifting themselves as high as they can out of the water, and slowly moving their heads to and fro, as if keeping time to the music. By and by one seal, more daring than its fellows, will come very close to the hunter, who then jumps to his feet and slays the creature, while its mates make off as quickly as possible.

Destructive Bullets.

Lee-Metford bullets were made effective during the recent Benin expedition through the soldiers shaving off the tops. This caused the case to drop off when the rifle was discharged, and enabled the leaden inner part to inflict a wound severe enough to stop the onset of attacking parties.

Anecdote AND Incident

The little maiden had a French nurse, of whom she was very fond. One day this nurse departed, and her small charge wandered about the house, upstairs and down, into the garden and back again, and finally hung about her mother, who was busy just then with the baby. Receiving no attention, she turned away, saying dejectedly: "Nobody loves me. I guess I'll go down in the garden and eat bugs. I ate free yes'day—two smoove ones and one woolly one."

A Georgia lawyer, who had a case in which conviction for his client seemed certain, closed his argument with a Scriptural quotation. To the amazement of all, the jury returned a verdict of "Not guilty" without leaving their seats. After court had adjourned, the lawyer approached the foreman. "I am curious to know," he said, just on what point of law you based your verdict?" "It warn't no law point, colonel," replied the foreman, "but we couldn't jest git over that Scripture."

An old darky was encountered by the expedition sent by Uncle Sam for the relief of sufferers by the Mississippi floods. Uncle Eph was in a dilapidated-looking skiff or dugout, which he was having considerable trouble to keep afloat. He was busy paddling with one hand and bailing out his craft with the other when the relief-boat came within hailing distance of him. The captain of the relief-boat called to him: "Hello, there, uncle! What do you want?" "Nothing but wings, boss?" was the answer.

When Wagner published his "Rienzi" he sent a copy of Offenbach, with a request that he would say what he thought of it. Offenbach had previously read some of Wagner's poems and had made fun of them. After some three weeks the score of "Rienzi" was returned to its composer, with a slip, on which was written: "Dear Wagner, your music is trash; stick to poetry." This, of course, enraged Wagner greatly, and some months later he was out with one of his celebrated brochures denouncing the Jews. It was a fine opportunity for revenge—Offenbach being an Israelite—and the brochure was in the hands of Offenbach in no time. Two days elapsed and Wagner had the pamphlet back. When he opened it, this is what he found written on the front page: "Dear Wagner, your brocure is rot; stick to music."

The Salmon Mystery.

Why salmon return to the sea after spawning has always been a mystery, but the fish in San Andreas Lake may in a measure solve the problem. That reservoir is full of fine big steelheads that can never return to the sea, but they are literally covered with parasites that resemble snails and are sometimes found to be an inch and a half in length. It has been found that the parasites die as soon as they are placed in salt water and drop off the fish, just as barnacles drop off a salt water vessel as soon as it anchors in a fresh water harbor. It is believed by some piscatorial experts that the salmon return to salt water to rid themselves of the parasites that attack them while in fresh water. Still others contend that the salmon never does return, but dies soon after spawning.

A Small Boy's Ingenuity.

A small boy in the Mission is the owner of a woolly little donkey of more than ordinary intelligence and perversity. Some time ago the manger in the stable fell down and struck the donkey on the head, since which time nothing could induce the animal to enter the stable of his own accord, and he wandered around the yard at his own sweet will.

The other day the boy found that the donkey viewed the lawn mower with mingled curiosity and alarm. He would not turn tail and run from it, but would back away, the while keeping his ears at a full cock, and his eyes on the machine. That fact gave the boy an idea. Now he leads the donkey to the stable door, turns the animal around and runs the lawn mower toward him. When the donkey backs into the stable the door is slammed on him before he realizes where he is.—San Francisco Post.

An Experted Mine.

"A few years ago," remarked an old mining man, "the Rawhide mines in Tuolumne County, California, were being hawked all over this country and Europe, but no one would touch them. The mines were offered for a song, and several Eastern and European experts were sent here to examine them. They all reported adversely, and the result was that they were not sold.

"The Nevills, who now own the mines, were not 'experts'—that is, college-bred experts—but they were practical miners and they thought they saw a good thing in the Rawhide. They acquired them and went to work. It cost quite a tidy little sum and the owners were nearly bankrupt before they made their big stake, but they have been taking out from $50,000 to $60,000 a month ever since. Altogether the mines have yielded about $4,000,000, and the present owners have been offered $1,750,000 for the mines by one of the syndicates that refused to touch them for a twentieth that price a few years ago. Which shows that there are some things the foreign expert does not know about mining."

Wanted It All in the Record.

"Now, your honor," argued the attorney in the court of Justice Brown of Santa Rosa, Cal., "I move dismissal of this case on the ground that the corpus delicti has not been established."

Judge Brown rubbed his chin in a perplexed way, fixed his gaze on the ceiling for a moment and then, clearing his throat, said:

"Of course, it is an old principle of law that the probator must correspond with the alligator, and in this case I am of the belief that the corpus is all right, but I don't know about the delicti."

"Your honor, I want that to go into the record," demanded opposing counsel. "I want the record to show that your honor said the corpus is all right, but you do not know about the delicti."

Judge Brown realized that he had blundered, and sat staring at the attorney for a moment. Then pulling himself together he said:

"All right, let that go into the record. But you fellows knew danged well I was only joking when I said it, and that will go into the record, too."

RUIN IN EMPTY SEATS.

New York Managers Find the Taste for Vaudeville Is Waning.

A New York dispatch says: There are millions of dollars invested in New York music halls, variety houses and theaters devoted to "specialty" performances, and unless there is a turn in the receding of popular support there is serious trouble ahead for at least a dozen of these places.

It is no secret that the music hall managers are in a quandary as to what to do in order to check the falling off in their receipts. The public a few seasons ago were "vaudeville mad," and packed the music halls all winter and the roof gardens all summer. But the appetite for that style of entertainment seems to have been satiated, and even the most expensive foreign attractions no longer draw one-quarter the patronage they did a couple of years ago.

When the rush began a few seasons ago to the music halls—using the term comprehensively, to cover all amusement places of this kind—they coined money. As high as $180,000 clear profit has been made at one house during a season. Such a mine was like the opening up of the gold fields of Cripple Creek. Others rushed in and the thing was worked to death in no time. Music halls multiplied. Where $50,000 was expended in one place, $100,000 was soon invested in another, and so it went on until Olympia capped the climax with a $2,000,000 building.

Multiplication of theaters meant a compound increase of the sharpest managerial rivalry. Ten dollars a week performers gave way to a list of $50 a night "artists." Actors were fought for by competing managers, who carried the battle into the European "specialty" markets, and salaries leaped higher and higher, until Mlle. Guilbert was brought over to the Olympia at $4,000 a week, only to be followed by Chevalier and Loie Fuller at Koster and Bial's on a salary and a percentage equaling probably that sum.

Even at these salary outlays enormous profits were made on all these early engagements. Any one of the three you choose to name played to over $10,000 a week, and the managers were in the heyday of their prosperity.

But the tide has turned, and it is an open secret that many well-known managers are in water well up to their chins. If some genius does not arise with a scheme capable of drawing dollars from the public as they were drawn two years ago, this summer will see Broadway strewn with wrecks of gigantic theatrical ventures.

Make Your Will.

A man possessed of one dollar or a few hundred dollars has as much right to arrange for the distribution of his possessions as the man who has millions. It is also as incumbent upon the man of small means to properly dispose of his holdings as it is upon the one who has more. The lawyers of this country would lose many fat fees if those who have accumulated a portion of this world's goods, be it ever so small, would leave specific directions as to what disposition should be made of their property after death. Making a will is generally regarded as a very solemn affair, says National Stockman. Surrounded by all the gloom and sorrow of the death-bed, where these important documents are generally made, the framing of a last will and testament is a very serious and unpleasant task.

Many put this matter off on account of the expense attached to it in lawyer's fees, etc. Anyone who can write a legible hand and express his ideas so that they can be understood can write his own will. The simpler the form the better, so it is clear. The following form will make as strong a testament as can be framed by any attorney:

I, ... of ..... County, ... State, do hereby make my last will and testament. I give, devise and bequeath all my estate, real and personal, to..... ..... heirs, executors, administrators and assigns.

I appoint ..... sole executor of this will.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand this ... day of ....., 189...

Signed.....

Signed, published and declared by the above named ..... as and for his last will and testament in the presence of us, who, in his presence and in the presence of each other and at his request, have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses.

.....
.....

A will of this kind will hold in the courts of any of the States if properly witnessed. Two witnesses are generally necessary. With this general form the distribution can be made to include any number of beneficiaries, or changed to suit circumstances.

Extensible Bier.

A new extensible bier, which can be easily moved around in a room or church, through narrow doors, aisles and other places where it is inconvenient for pallbearers to handle a casket, has two skeleton-wheeled standards, detachably connected by a single rod, so that the bier can be adapted to a casket of any length. The legs are rotarily mounted on wheel forks, carrying rollers, the crowns of which are provided with ball-bearing joints.

Back-Acting Excavator.

In an improved steam shovel or excavator the shovel instead of being thrust from the car of the machine in digging or taking up a load is moved toward the machine, which is thereby particularly well adapted for places where the surface to be removed is underlaid by ground too soft to support the weight of the machine after the surface is removed, as the car can travel in advance of the work.

Same Result.

"Didn't you say that the former Miss Dashaway was defeated in her campaign for Mayor?"

"I did."

"Then how do you figure out that she rules the town?"

"She married her successful opponent."—Philadelphia North American.

HOITT'S SCHOOL.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MOTHERS.

We are asserting in the courts our right to the exclusive use of the word "CASTORIA," and "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," as our Trade Mark.

I, Dr. Samuel Pitcher, of Hyannis, Massachusetts, was the originator of "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," the same that has borne and does now bear the fac-simile signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on every wrapper. This is the original "PITCHER'S CASTORIA" which has been used in the homes of the mothers of America for over thirty years. Look Carefully at the wrapper and see that it is the kind you have always bought, and has the signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on the wrapper. No one has authority from me to use my name except The Centaur Company of which Chas. H. Fletcher is President.

March 8, 1897. SAMUEL PITCHER, M.D.

ERE THE FAREWELL IS SPOKEN

On the deck of the steamer, or on board the train that is to bear you away from those dear to you, you will, if you are wise, have safely stowed away in your luggage a sufficient supply of that safeguard against illness—Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Commercial travelers, tourists and pioneer emigrants concur in testifying to the fortifying and saving properties of the great tonic. Use for constipation, biliousness, malarial and kidney complaints and nervousness.

Mrs. Newrocks—I like our new butler very much. Mr. Newrocks—So do I; but sometimes I'm afraid he has a poor opinion of us.

CHEAP IRRIGATION.

The Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, Cal., the largest builders of gas, gasoline and oil engines on the Coast, are making extensive preparations for the season's business.

They are filling several orders for large irrigating plants and as this line of their business increases each season, it is safe to say the farmers throughout the State are appreciating the advantages of irrigation with water pumped by this cheap power.

The Hercules Works are at present building an 80 H. P. engine for Geo. F. Packer, Colusa, which will raise 6000 gallons per minute from the river and distribute it over his land. This will be the largest gasoline pumping plant in existence.

$400.00 not $200.00

Two San Francisco grocers—Ring Bros. and T. Salomon—won $100.00 each because they sent the most yellow tickets before June 15th.

But grocers and clerks can get more tickets than other consumers; so we also paid $100.00 each to the two persons named below:

Mrs. Wm. Funk, Winnemucca, Nevada, 132 tickets.
Mrs. L. During, 819 Bryant Street, San Francisco, 72 tickets.

Mrs. During got a number of friends in San Francisco and near by (one keeps a boarding house) to give her their tickets; and she used the tea herself.
